Home Bares Terms

LONDON (UPI) — Britain and Rhodesia today unveiled the terms of a draft peace settlement that would end the breakaway colony's six-year rebellion and perhaps hand over rule to its black African majority at some unspecified future date.

Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home, who signed the pact with Rhodesian Premier Ian Smith in Salisbury Wednesday, told parliament the terms are "fair and honorable."

Smith, in a statement to his own white-dominated parliament in Salisbury, termed it "fair and practical." He said it will meet the needs "of all fair minded people."

AT UN

Simultaneously, Britian explained the terms to a specially convened session of the United Nations Security Council in New York.

But the British opposition Labor party branded it as a "sell-out" and Britain also faced angry reactions from African members of UN.

Sir Alec, who arrived back from Salisbury early this morning, said the terms are fully within the scope of the so-called "five principles" laid down by successive British governments as a condition for recognizing Rhodesian indepenence.

These call for unimpeded progress towards ultimate rule by Rhodesia's black African majority, guarantees against restrogressive amendments of the Rhodesian constitution, immediate improvement of the political status of Rhodesia's African population, ending of racial discrimination and independence acceptable to the Rhodesian people as a whole.

MAIN CONDITIONS

At present all political power is in the hands of 250,000 white Rhodesians. The five million Africans have only token parliamentary representation.

The main conditions of the settlement were:

- Rhodesia's 1969 republican constitution will be amended and the 16 African members of parliament will be increased gradually to 50 to give them equality with the white lawmakers. In addition, there will be 10 more members elected jointly by whites and Africans.
- Rhodesia promises to make progress towards ending racial discrimination.
- The Rhodesian government will release 31 of the 93 Africans now held in political detention.
- The Rhodesian government will make "significant" additional amounts of land available for African settlement. At present all land is divided 50-50 between the 250,000 whites and five million Africans.
- Britain will provide up to $12.5 million annually for 10 years in capital and technical assistance to Rhodesia's Africans.
- Britain will name a commission which will visit Rhodesia and test whether the settlement is acceptable to Rhodesians as a whole.

Troopers file into Rahway prison where warden, guards are hostages.

Prison Ransom Talks Start

RAHWAY, N.J. (AP) — Rioting prisoners held the warden and five guards hostage today at Rahway state prison and officials said negotiations were under way with prisoners who had seized control of portions of the maximum security institution.

A spokesman for the state department of institutions and agencies said talks were between prisoners and prison administrators.

"If further help should be needed from concerned citizens who might be helpful it will be requested," the spokesman said.

State troopers and corrections officers were massed outside the prison, but no plan to use them was announced.

About 50 helmeted troopers, all armed with shotguns, massed at the entrance to a tunnel-like corridor that leads through the outer wall of the prison into the yard. Reporters had been kept in a room off the corridor but were evacuated shortly before the troopers arrived this morning.

It was not known how many of the 1,142 prisoners at the maximum-security institution were involved in the riot or how much of the prison they controlled. Officials also said they did not know whether any of the prisoners were armed.

Eleven guards were reported injured, three with stab wounds, in the rioting, which began about 10 p.m. Wednesday during a movie in the auditorium.

Tom Durand, public information officer for the state department of institutions and agencies, said the trouble started when a prisoner jumped onto the stage and began a speech on "the injustice of American society."

There were about 600 prisoners in the auditorium at the time and some 150 refused to leave. Warden Samuel Vukcevich and several guards went to the auditorium, where he and six of the guards were seized by the insurrectionists.

Later, a prisoner who said his name was "Ali Ra Hassan" shouted to reporters from a window: "We asked the superintendent to send for a doctor for the warden and they wouldn't." He was asked whether the warden was injured but his reply was inaudible. Prison officials had no comment.

'No Return Point Near'

NEW DELHI (CP) — Pakistan charged today that Indian forces, supported by tanks and artillery, were continuing their attacks in five border areas of East Pakistan.

Radio Pakistan quoted Pakistani President Agha Mohammed Yahya Khan as saying in a speech at the dedication of a heavy machinery plant that relations with India had reached a point of no return.

Pakistan will defend "its honor and territorial integrity with all the forces at its command" in the event of an open conflict with India, the broadcast quoted him as saying.

At the ceremony Li Shi-ching, Chinese minister of heavy machinery, said that "China resolutely supports Pakistan against foreign aggression and interference."

The heavy machinery plant and a planned heavy foundry and forge on the site, both built with Chinese help, are expected to provide Pakistan with the ability to build military vehicles and tanks.

A dispatch from Dacca, East Pakistan, said officials there reported that the Indians had opened a new front Wednesday with air support in the north Bengal area and gained some ground.

But Radio Pakistan said Pakistani troops beat back two attacks, killing 480 Indian soldiers and damaging two tanks.

REPORTS DEATHS

The broadcast said seven Pakistanis were killed and 11 wounded in the fresh fighting near the Hilli and Dinajpur district of north Bengal. The area is more than 150 miles north of the Jessore district where Pakistan claimed Monday that Indian troops had launched an "all-out attack."

Indian officials here denied that any New Delhi forces were fighting across the border but admitted that the army has permission to cross into East Pakistan for self-defence.

An Indian spokesman said the attacks in East Pakistan were made by the Mukti Bahini independence fighters, trying to wrest control of the province from the military government headed by Yahya Khan.

Pakistani Foreign Secretary Sulton M. Khan said Pakistan was "actively considering" appealing to the UN Security Council to intervene in the crisis.

An Indian government spokesman denied reports the Soviet Union was planning to resolve the crisis with a conference similar to the one that led to the Tashkent agreement of 1966.

Deputy Foreign Minister Surendra Pal Singh told Parliament there was no basis for such reports.

In Washington, U.S. State Secretary William Rogers called in representatives of both nations and urged a mutual troop withdrawal from the border areas.

SUDDENLY BLIND, GIRL SEES AGAIN

HOLYROOD, Ont. (CP) — A 15-year-old girl who suddenly lost her eyesight 10 months ago, regained it just as suddenly this week.

Ann Ackert, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Ackert of this community 90 miles northwest of Toronto, was walking along a corridor at her high school Jan. 6 when she suddenly became blind.

On Monday she was walking along a corridor at her new school when her sight returned.

Ann said today she had been told by her doctors that her sight would return, "but they didn't know when or how." They "really didn't know what caused my blindness."

Ann said the return of her sight was a gradual sensation that was hard to describe. The first thing she remembers is seeing the corridor and the first thing she did was ask to see her parents.

Dollar Drops As Gold Soars

New York Times

PARIS — American dollars were unloaded in the major European centres Wednesday and the price of gold rose to its highest level in nearly four years as speculation on a dollar devaluation intensified before next week's crucial monetary meeting of 10 leading non-Communist governments in Rome.

Corporations, banks and large investors were seeking to reduce their dollar holdings to minimum quantities and were buying the robust Western European currencies such as the German mark, the British pound, the Dutch guilder, and the Swiss, Belgian and French francs as well as the Japanese yen.

The dollar moved back to Wednesday's record low in Zurich today of 3.9480 Swiss francs. It had closed slightly higher Wednesday night.

In London, the dollar dipped three cents with the pound quoted at $2.4939.

In Frankfurt, the dollar dropped to 3.3025 marks, down from Wednesday's close of 3.3080.

It declined to a record low again in Tokyo closing at 328.20 yen. The closing rate represented an increase of 9.689 per cent in the value of the yen since it was floated Aug. 28.

HANOI RECOGNIZED

OSLO (UPI) — Norway and North Vietnam have reached agreement to establish diplomatic relations at ambassadorial level, the Norwegian foreign ministry announced today.

A foreign ministry spokesman said the North Vietnamese government in a letter dated Nov. 23 and delivered through Norway's Peking ambassador accepted the Norwegian offer.

Norway becomes the first member country of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to recognize Hanoi diplomatically.

The only other western nations to recognize North Vietnam are Sweden and Switzerland.

Denmark has announced its intention to do so.

The decisions in Norway and Denmark were taken after the old centre-right coalition governments were replaced earlier this year by socialist governments.

The Norwegian foreign ministry said Norway's Peking ambassador Per Ravne will also be accredited in Hanoi.

Foreign ministry sources said it is not quite clear who the North Vietnamese ambassador in Oslo will be. But the sources said it could either be the North Vietnamese ambassador to Moscow or Hanoi's new ambassador in Stockholm.

British Troops Fire At Fleeing Gunman

BELFAST (UPI) — British troops fired at a gunman in Belfast and arrested 24 men in searches in the Northern Ireland capital and Londonderry today, the army said.

An army spokesman said soldiers were unable to say whether their bullets struck the gunman, who was seen moving through a cordoned area of Belfast.

Soldiers seized 23 men in a search through the Roman Catholic Ballymurphy district of Belfast and in smaller searches in Londonderry arrested one man, an army spokesman said.

A sniper fired at two sentries on duty at an observation post in the Roman Catholic Ardoyne district of Belfast this afternoon, an army spokesman said.

The spokesman said the shots missed the sentries, and troops afterwards raided two houses in the district, seizing explosives, ammunition and bomb cases.

Troops fired rubber bullets to break up a crowd which surrounded them hurling bottles and stones as the soldiers withdrew from the area, the spokesman said.

Earlier, British troops fired rubber bullets at youths they said tried to set fire to a customs post at the Irish Republic border town of Strabane.

Two nail bombs exploded at a Belfast police station, but caused no casualties.

British bomb disposal squads have been lucky recently. Frequently they escaped death or serious injury by minutes.

Luck ran out Wednesday night for WO C. J. Davies, a married man from Glamorgan, Wales. A bomb he was trying to dismantle in a Lurgan car showroom exploded, bringing down a wall and crushing Davies to death.

COTE WANTS TALKS ON POSTAL DISPUTE

OTTAWA (CP) — Talks are about to resume between Postmaster-General Jean-Pierre Cote and the Letter Carriers Union of Canada over the current dispute on the hiring of casual labor by the post office.

The union received a letter late Wednesday from Mr. Cote saying he is willing to meet their representatives for a frank and open discussion, a union spokesman said today.

The union replied today in a hand-delivered letter that it also is willing to have a general discussion on the issue.

The union spokesman said Mr. Cote had not "gone along completely" with the union's statement Tuesday that it would attend a meeting provided the minister would agree to a condition beforehand.

Mr. Cote said in his reply that he did not think pre-conditions should be set.

School Changes Not Concessions

Education Minister Donald Brothers denied Wednesday that recently announced curriculum changes in the province's schools are a concession to dissenting principals such as Campbell River's John Young.

The changes, which will affect Grade 11 students in September, 1972, allow students a greater degree of choice in course selection. They no longer have to be "streamed" into one of his study areas.

The changes were dismissed today as "very modest indeed" by Young.

But educationists in Greater Victoria and elsewhere have welcomed the curriculum reorganization, which gives students more flexibility in choosing their course of studies.

Young said the new policy relaxing the influence of the provincial department of education in this field represents merely a "token" change.

"They are improvements, yes, but very inadequate ones to meet the real needs of students in our schools," he said.

CONFUSED

Young noted that effective last September students starting Grade 11 need 12 courses for graduation instead of the former 10 courses, and said this will only increase the present failure rate of 45 per cent by graduating students.

Young also said he thought the public might be confused on the question of terminal examinations.

"They are providing a high school graduation certificate which is going to be different from university entrance," he said, "but those students wanting to go to university are still going to have to write government examinations."

"I think it's a progressive move and I'm very much in favor of it," Greater Victoria school board chairman Allan McKinnon said today.

Many educators have been concerned for some time about the emphasis placed in the high school curriculum on university entrance, McKinnon said.

The new policy will enable young people to go to university "without being funnelled in that direction all the way through their high school career."

SAMPLE

Students would now be able to sample other disciplines in a more rounded program of educational development, he said.

McKinnon added: "We also like the idea of being able to conduct our own final exams for our own purposes, rather than preparing students for four years to write what amounts to a university entrance exam.

"The present system was really designed to meet the needs of the university rather than the needs of the high school"

Similar points were made by John Wiens, director of instruction for Greater Victoria school district, in predicting the "beneficial effects" of the curriculum changes.

If teachers do not have the departmental exams "hanging over their heads" they will be able to introduce wider scope to courses, he said.

Wiens also said the Victoria school district has advocated for some time the requirement of 12 compulsory courses for graduation, with the feeling it gave a much broader educational base.

Strangest Hijack Ever: Escape by Parachute

RENO, Nev. (UPI) — A man collected $200,000 ransom and escaped by parachute from an airliner Wednesday night in the most bizarre of all the airliner hijackings.

FBI and law enforcement agents were searching for a middle-aged, swarthy man who gave the name of D. B. Cooper, when he boarded the jetliner at Portland, Ore. He was believed to have parachuted from the rear door of a Norwest Airlines 727 jetliner somewhere between Seattle and Reno.

The ransom, turned over to the middle-aged hijacker when he released 38 passengers in Seattle, was the largest ever paid in a U.S. plane hijack. His parachute escape over the western wilderness was a nearly unbelievable feat that baffled authorities.

Officials were checking a report that Cooper was an experienced "smoke jumper" (parachute fire fighter).

The hijacker flashed what appeared to be a bomb on a flight from Portland, Ore., to Seattle late Wednesday. He let the passengers off at Seattle after being handed a bag containing $200,000 and four parachutes.

"Let's get this show on the road," he told the plane's pilot, Capt. William Scott. The airliner then took off and flew low over the wilds of Oregon and Nevada. The hijacker apparently left through the back door.

As the 727 approached Reno, Scott radioed that the hijacker "took leave of us" somewhere en route. One of the parachutes and the ransom money were gone.

Officers and dogs fanned out around the Reno airport, but FBI agent Harold Campbell said there was "no way" the man could have left the plane after it landed.

Two U.S. Air Force planes shadowed the airliner as it flew south from Portland but the pilots said they did not see the man jump.

The hijacker was described by one passenger as "very relaxed."

Robert Gregory of Puyallup, Wash., sat four seats from him.

"He was dark and had dark black hair and a swarthy complexion," he said. "He had very dark, black-colored glasses on. He was kind of slumped down in the seat."

Another passenger, William Mitchell, 20, Redmond, Wash., said he sat across the aisle from the hijacker and didn't know the plane had been hijacked until it landed.

He said he saw the hijacker whispering to a stewardess sitting next to him early in the flight. "We had no idea there was a hijacker involved until we got off the plane," said Arnold Andvik of Seattle.

Passengers said they were told after the flight left Portland that there was a "slight mechanical problem" and that the plane had been asked to circle Seattle to consume excess fuel.

A WHISKY FOR THE STRANGER

ROSLYN HEIGHTS, N.Y. (Reuter) — When the Samuel Eastman family returned home from a night out they found a stranger inside having a drink and talking to their collie.

When Eastman demanded to know what the man was doing in his house, the stranger slumped down in an easy-chair with his drink and told him, "Why I'm having a drink with the dog and a very pleasant conversation."

Asked by Eastman how he got inside, the man replied, "The dog invited me in and asked me to join him in a drink. So I poured a scotch for him and one for myself."

Eastman called police and the stranger, identified as Douglas Cameron, 29, a market researcher from Andover, Mass., repeated his story. He was charged with first-degree burglary and later released on $1,000 bail.

The case then went to a grand jury which refused Tuesday to return an indictment against Cameron.

Mrs. Eastman, for one, was delighted with the verdict.

"I thought I was the only one who drank scotch and had conversations with Frisky (the collie). I'm so happy there is someone else who can share those pleasures with our dog."

Cabinet Order Withdrawn

The provincial government has officially withdrawn a controversial cabinet order which required the municipality of Stewart to drop legal action against a former Social Credit candidate.

The move, made public in cabinet orders released today following a cabinet meeting Monday, was indicated earlier by Municipal Affairs Minister Dan Campbell. He said Monday he was prepared to withdraw the order on the grounds that the mayor of Stewart had offered to settle the controversy himself.

The order was made three weeks ago following an inquiry into complaints by ex-Social Credit candidate Peter Curran who charged discrimination against his mobile home business by the municipal council.

The inquiry, conducted by Everett Brown, former deputy municipal affairs minister, found no ground for the discrimination charges but recommended Curran's business, conducted without municipal authority, be accepted on the municipality's tax rolls and legal action against him be dropped.

Liberal Leader Pat McGeer, speaking in Victoria today before withdrawal of the order was made public, charged that it was a violation of the Municipal Act.

'Major Scandal' Charge By McGeer on Pipeline

Liberal Leader Pat McGeer today described as "the major scandal of the decade" the provincial government's handling of plans for a natural gas pipeline to Vancouver Island.

McGeer called for the resignation of Resources Minister Ray Williston from his position as a director of B.C. Hydro to end what the Liberal leader termed a conflict of interest between Williston's roles as a cabinet member and Hydro director.

WILL APPEAR

"I intend to appear before the Public Utilities Commission to defend the right of B.C. Hydro to provide natural gas to Vancouver Island because they have offered to do the job at almost $50 million below that of the friends of the government who have been given the nod by the cabinet," McGeer said.

The hearing, scheduled for some time next year, will consider an application by Malaspina Gas Pipeline Ltd. to build the line at a cost close to $100 million using a northern route across the Strait of Georgia from Powell River.

Hydro offered to build the line at a cost close to $50 million using a southern route but the cabinet selected Malaspina to apply for the permit.

Hydro at first said it would appear at the PUC hearing to question Malaspina's submission but last week Hydro Chairman Gordon Shrum announced the crown corporation wouldn't appear because it shouldn't oppose government policy.

McGreer told a press conference in Victoria that Williston's position as a Hydro director is a conflict of interest situation because of the clash between the public interest as represented by Hydro's pipeline plans and the opposing plans of the cabinet.

He said Hydro should build the line not only because it can do it more economically but because it's higher credit rating would give it an advantage over a private company in raising funds on the open market.

But McGeer said he is against Hydro building the line from borrowed Canada Pension Plan money and other trust funds from which it borrows for electric power development.

He said it would be unthinkable for Hydro to let private enterprise build an electric power development for twice the price it could do it by itself — yet the government was proposing to allow such a situation in construction of a gas pipeline.

McGeer said he can't see any difference between electricity transmission lines and a gas pipeline where the public interest is concerned.

Third Crossing Set

Premier Bennett said Wednesday that the federal government has agreed to give the province $14 million toward construction of a proposed third crossing of Burrard Inlet.

Bennett said he hopes the agreement will lead to a start on construction of either a bridge or tunnel crossing before the end of this winter. The province already has allocated $27 million for the project.

Bennett said agreement was reached in Vancouver at an unpublicized meeting between himself and federal Transport Minister Don Jamieson.

. . . BROTHERS

"If all we are trying to do is to graduate students faster and faster, however, then I feel we have lost sight of the goals of education," he said.

"We should be trying to improve education, not to reduce its quality."

Jim MacFarlane, vice-president of the B.C. Teachers' Federation, said the changes were on the lines of what the federation had been advocating.

Dr. J. H. Wormsbecker, director of instruction for the Vancouver school district, said the district had also been urging the changes for a number of years, to overcome a "built-in rigidity" in the present system.

"We feel it is definitely a step forward," Brothers said. "It provides more flexibility in secondary schools today.

"I want to stress that in planning this forward step in curriculum organization, we have built in safeguards to maintain a high standard of education in the schools of the province."

He said the objectives of the reorganization are:

- To make more definite the distinction between graduation requirements and requirements for admission to post-secondary institutions;
- To provide students the opportunity to either "study in depth" a particular course of subjects or "study in breadth" a number of unrelated subjects.

Brothers said he hopes post-secondary institutions will adopt the practice of accepting students who have completed graduation in B.C. without further entrance requirements.

'Firm Wants Us To Walk Out'

PORT ALBERNI — A union official said today that MacMillan Bloedel is trying to provoke a walkout by 300 loggers at the Franklin River division.

John Squire, secretary of Local 1-85 of the International Woodworkers of America, said five men have been fired and one suspended this week, the latest one this morning.

"The Franklin River crew have remained on the job this morning despite company harassment of the crew through firings and intimidation," he said.

MEETING CANCELLED

The dispute is mainly over a new logging machine where a rate of pay has yet to be agreed on, said Squire. He said the company agreed to a meeting this morning, but then cancelled it.

The loggers walked out Monday after the camp chairman and vice-chairman were fired. The company said the reason was for refusing to direct an order to work. The union said the men were attempting to discuss grievances and that it was a management responsibility to direct people to work.

Another logger was suspended Tuesday when he refused to opeate the new tension skidder. He was later reinstated.

The IWA said two men were fired Wednesday for refusing to operate the same piece of equipment; as was another man this morning. Grievance action is being taken in all cases said Squire.

Thetis Acres Waterway Key

Purchase of 12.38 acres of waterfront at Thetis Cove for a park by the Capital Regional Board could be the key to a Gorge waterway linking Portage Inlet with Esquimalt Harbor.

Board chairman Hugh Curtis said Wednesday this was one of several reasons the property was bought from the Canadian Puget Sound Timber and Lumber Co. for $81,048. The B.C. government will absorb one-third of the cost.

The new waterfront park fronting on Esquimalt Harbor is located between View Royal Avenue and the E and Railway tracks — a narrow neck of land separating the harbor and Portage Inlet.

The distance between the harbor and the inlet is about 1,800 feet.

Curtis said the proposal for a water link between the two bodies of water has been a dream for more than 100 years and this is now possible through the purchase of land at Thetis Cove.

"Any plan for connecting the inlet with the harbor would be incomplete without this property," he said. "This proposal and others for the development of the park will have to be considered in the future."

Curtis says he would like some sort of a water link with Esquimalt harbor. This would require acquisition of some land fronting on Portage Inlet.

"It would still be a park with a landscaped waterway," he said.

The water could be financed through a number of ways — by combined municipalities, the Capital Region District or the Capital Improvement District, he said.

Frank E. Neate, Saanich senior design engineer, who has made a detailed study of the Gorge waterway, said two types of waterways could be constructed — a high level canal or a deep one for large pleasure boats.

But Neate doesn't think a deep canal is a realistic proposal as it would coast at least $2,000,000 and it might harm the ecology of Portage Inlet. It would also cool the Gorge waters.

But a high level canal for canoes and manually propelled boats could be constructed for a reasonable figure, he says. This would require construction of two ramps at Portage and Thetis Cove and short portages to the canal.

It would vary in width from 40 to 250 feet and six feet in depth. It also could be used for swimming.

Neate declined to estimate the cost of constructing such a canal but other sources said it would vary between $40,000 and $60,000.

"It is expected that private canoeing will increase substantially through increased interest and an increase in population, Neate said.

"In addition, canoe rentals may easily return to the Gorge and form a major attraction for residents and tourists alike," he added.

He also pointed out that Thetis Cove is a key area for developing a 3½-mile loop trail that would pass through varied terrain and scenery.

Neate believes that walking, like canoeing and small boat sailing will become increasingly important as green belts disappear and traffic clogs main highways out of the city.

"The park is a valuable acquisition," he said. "It is certainly a vital link between the harbor and Portage Inlet."

IRON SUPPLEMENT in the form of a machine bolt turned up Wednesday in loaf produced by McDonald's Bakery Ltd., 524 Culduthel. The bread was bought for Mrs. Rose Yeomans, 1414 Hillside, by her daughter. Bakery owner John McDonald said: "We turned the place upside down" to find where the bolt had come loose from a machine. The bolt has been replaced by rivet so the mishap won't happen again. McDonald also said the firm makes 15,000 to 20,000 loaves a day and has been doing so for 10 years. That makes the odds on Mrs. Yeoman's bolt one in 54,750,000.

Russia, China Clash in UN

UNITED NATIONS (CP) — China and Russia clashed for the first time in the United Nations Wednesday night, each backhanding the other while slapping at the United States. The subject was disarmament.

Deputy Foreign Minister Chiao Kuan-hua of China told the General Assembly the Soviet Union and the United States had "concocted" the nuclear test ban and non-proliferation treaties to "camouflage . . . their own nuclear arms expansion in the name of disarmament."

Deputy Foreign Minister Jacob Malik of Russia retorted that Chiao had joined U.S. State Secretary William Rogers in "a curious Sino-American duet of negativism in regard to the Soviet proposal for the convening of a world disarmament conference."

Chiao, chairman of China's assembly delegation, touched off the confrontation by proposing that a pending Soviet resolution for such a conference "should not be put to vote at this session" of the assembly on grounds that it had no "clear aim."

MALIK HITS BACK

Malik, head of the Soviet permanent UN mission, observed that only Rogers had previously opposed the Soviet proposal. He said the idea the Chinese had put forward was "the best possible gift they could make to the imperialists, who for 26 years have been fighting against disarmament."

Chiao lumped the Soviet Union and the United States together as "two superpowers" using UN disarmament resolutions "to hoodwink world opinion."

His basic concept was that the Soviet Union and the United States arrived at agreements that were designed to continue their nuclear weapons leadership over the whole world. Then they had imposed these agreements over the whole world.

He contended that the Africans, the Arabs, and the Indochinese were "compelled" to take up arms to fight variously for national liberation and salvation and against occupation and aggression.

But as for "the two superpowers," he said the people of the world demanded that they withdraw thousands of military bases and more than a million men that they have abroad and the general assembly was duty bound to take effective measures to satisfy that demand.

China had developed nuclear weapons only for defence.

Jubilee Expansion Okayed

Expansion of two facilities at Royal Jubilee Hospital was approved at a meeting of the Capital regional hospital board Wednesday.

Directors agreed to reallocation of $214,000 in previously approved funds for building so the hospital can make greater use of the Bay Pavilion.

Jubilee will also be allowed to redirect $81,855 from previous allocations for expansion of the radioisoptope laboratory. The changes still require approval of the B.C. Hospital Insurance Service, provincial agency charged with overseeing hospital development.

Development of the Bay Pavilion, formerly the hospital's psychiatric unit, will see 29 pediatric beds added and abandonment of the 18-bed children's isolation unit, now housed in an ancient building at the rear of the hospital.

In other business, chairman Jim Cumming reported that negotiations for about 35 acres off Helmcken near the Trans-Canada Highway are continuing "and it is hoped that a cost-per-acre settlement can be made in the near future."

The site is proposed for a 225-bed hospital for chronic care patients.

Truck Driver Tries Again

Carl Christian Anderson, 2031 Courser Drive, is the latest candidate to file papers for a two-year term on Sidney council.

Anderson, a truck driver, was narrowly defeated in a by-election held last May for a seat vacated by former alderman Herb Perry.

Mayor Stan Dear, incumbent Alderman Hugh Hollingworth and Bernard Ethier have already filed papers for the Dec. 11 election.

A SAFETY WALK

Only two persons were injured during Victoria's Pedestrian Safety Week which ended Saturday — a 50 per cent reduction on last year, says the Capital Region Safety Council.

The injuries during safety week Nov. 15-20, as police cracked down on jaywalkers, were in Central Saanich and in Victoria. Last year there were four injuries — three in Victoria and one in Esquimalt.

Safety week this year was moved back to the November dates from similar dates in December, observed in 1969 and 1970, to focus attention on the need for pedestrian safety during the Christmas shopping rush.

Scott Will Attend Chamber Meeting

Mayoralty hopeful Bill Scott says he has changed his mind and will attent a Chamber of Commerce luncheon Dec. 2 for candidates.

Earlier reports had Scott refusing to attend the meeting — which will include a questioning panel — because he said he had not been treated seriously in earlier, similar meetings.

He has now decided to attend because "I have been assured by officials of the chamber of commerce . . . there will not be the previous prejudice and rank descrimination shown towards me which caused my protest against the press."

"Also persuading me to accept is the fact that I have would be letting them down if I did not add my stimulating contribution in this struggle to obtain prestige in the hierarchy of mayoralty candidates."

Scott added that "on no account" is he dropping out of the race to elect a mayor Dec. 11 in Victoria.

What Election?

The hotly contested mayoral and aldermanic contests that had been expected in Victoria this year have settled down into a dull exchange of routine murmurs enlivened at rare intervals by a routine snarl. It is difficult to realize that there is an aldermanic race on at all, so slow is the pace to the finish line. And the struggle for the mayor's chair has become a struggle to keep from yawning.

This is not entirely the fault of the candidates. In a sense they are trapped in the electoral pattern of our era, in which the disembodied hot-line of the electronic medium has replaced the face-to-face meeting of an earlier generation. It was at the latter that there was personal contact between the candidate and his audience, and voters had a good chance to see as well as hear the persons who sought to represent the public. Today, that exposure is once-removed, and although questions and answers can flow, the individual campaigns are conducted in relative personal vacuums.

The expense of one-man meetings, and the reluctance of the voter of today to turn out to a hall to hear speeches, result in participants waiting for the relative anonymity of an all-candidate rally to present themselves to the public, and this limited opportunity is a far cry from the spirited and frequent gatherings of an earlier time.

While radio and television have in one sense brought candidates to the people in a way never before experienced, in another way they have walled off the aspirant to public office from the people whom he wishes to persuade. There are probably fewer people going to voting booths nowadays who know the candidates as flesh-and-blood human beings than ever before. When shadows vote for shadows there tends to be little real involvement.

The tragedy of the current election campaign and of the democratic process itself is that the public tends to match apathy with apathy. And while it is true that a candidate's qualifications are best assessed on what he has done during the past year in office or in public affairs of various kinds, now is the time when he should show that spark of originality and imagination which will impress the voters.

Generalities are not enough. What would make this campaign a live one for the public would be the candidates' determined insistence on their personal stands on the various issues that have arisen. The man who will nail his planks to a platform of clear, specific promises and undertakings in regard to city planning, the Reid controversy, the Inner Harbor and Old Town development, Thetis Lake Park, sewage treatment, housing, traffic and other concrete questions is the one who will inspire public support.

The people this year are less interested in sweeping promises to do what is best, or act on one's conscience, than they are in what exactly the candidate undertakes to do about this, and this, and this.

Victoria traditionally has suffered poor turnouts to the civic polls. Anything over a 25 per cent attendance has come to be considered pretty good. That is shocking, of course; it is a dreadful waste of democratic freedoms which have been hard-won down through the centuries.

But part of the remedy lies with the candidates, whose lists will be completed within five days and whose fate will be determined in 16. They must make themselves worth turning out to vote for. It is not yet too late for candidates to break into a fast run for the tape, rather than coast up to it. An election is an expression of public preference — and it is up to the candidate to make himself look preferable.

A different wind at the U.N.

PAUL WHITELAW

'The Art of the Possible'

QUEBEC CITY: Premier Robert Bourassa can appreciate readily, after 18 months in power, that politics is the art of the possible.

Elected on ambitious promises of reduced unemployment, a rejuvenated economy and a new dawn in federal provincial relations, Mr. Bourassa has learned how embarrassing it can be for a politician to promise — or even attempt — more than he can deliver.

That's one of the reasons why the youthful Quebec leader maintained such a low profile at the recent federal provincial economic conference.

Mr. Bourassa has been able to return home from three days of talks in Ottawa pointing with satisfaction to concessions and promises, however minor or vague, which were extracted from federal officials.

Reward of Restraint

If Mr. Bourassa had proclaimed Quebec's demands noisily in the press before and during the conference, he would now look like the loser in what many Quebecers view as a tug-of-war between himself and Prime Minister Trudeau.

As things stand, the federal government rejected outright Quebec's proposal for changes in the formula for calculating equalization payments — despite support from several other premiers. Broadening the tax base for equalization payments to include school and municipal taxes would have meant several hundred million dollars for Quebec.

BOURASSA
. . . low-key presence

However, Mr. Bourassa did announce that Quebec will be allowed a special abatement of 25 tax points, an increase from 22, as partial compensation for shared cost programs from which Quebec has 'opted out.' Each tax point is worth $19 millions for the province.

Mr. Bourassa once again pointed out that he is a hard-nosed pragmatist who isn't interested in losing public arguments about philosophies when he can receive practical concessions which he can announce to the Quebec electorate.

The premier and his advisers apparently decided before they travelled to the Ottawa conference that there was little hope of getting anything but money out of Prime Minister Trudeau. Therefore, the Quebec delegation concentrated on quietly documenting their arguments for a greater share of tax revenues.

Quebec's unusually low-key presence at the conference tended to cover up Mr. Bourassa's anxiety over what the federal-provincial conferences have accomplished since he was elected in April, 1970.

Economist's Puzzle

Mr. Bourassa — an economist by profession — is becoming increasingly anxious about the current fashion of supporting the economy, and the conferences that co-ordinate federal and provincial policy. He wonders how effective current policies and methods will be if, as some members of his cabinet have suggested, unemployment and inflation are now permanent features of the economy.

Perhaps more than any other Canadian premier, Mr. Bourassa is under pressure to work for effective and permanent solutions. Critics are fond of pointing to his election promise — still unfulfilled — that he would make Quebec prosper within confederation.

Teaching by Example in Creston

Kaslo-Creston Grade 3 teacher Dorothy Shepherd may not have solved the problem of mounting educational costs in her school district by returning to the board $1,000 of her $6,000 salary. She has, on the other hand, given fellow members of the profession food for serious thought in the explanation for her action.

She tried, she says, "to impress upon members and the executive of the B.C. Teachers' Federation that unbridled salary demands will undercut our public image in a community such as Creston, but it appears very few teachers will buy this argument."

Therefore, she added, she had returned $1,000 of her earnings as evidence of good faith and had offered to negotiate a smaller salary.

Miss Shepherd's action became feasible following the amendment to the school act earlier this year which eliminated membership in the B.C. Teachers' Federation as a condition of employment. She has resigned from her local association which is affiliated with the federation.

The Creston teacher's full salary was only a shade above one-half the average $11,500 reported for Greater Victoria teachers, who are negotiating for still better returns.

Her belief that wage demands, which she considers excessive, could price teachers out of jobs is no idle concept. In the last year or two a number of small rural districts have found it necessary to hire less expensive help, not because they wanted teachers with lower certification, but because they could not afford those with senior degrees and increment-earning experience.

In the prevailing mood of today, Miss Shepherd's gesture may produce few results within the profession. It has, however, dramatized her belief that the persistent demands of teachers for higher pay may be self-defeating. It has also shown the independence a member of the profession can display when not bound by virtually compulsory allegiance to the union.

JAMES RESTON

Principles and Possibilities

NEW YORK — Almost everybody seems to be moaning low these days about wages and prices, but one of the good things about the bad economic news is that it brings men in power back to reality. This is one of the uses of adversity. It compels long-delayed thought and action; it strips away slack practices, and enables institutions to face the awkward problems they usually evaded in more prosperous days.

George Meany, of the AFL-CIO, knew all along that America couldn't afford his hawkish Vietnam policy, his policies on welfare, social security, and wages, without pricing the nation out of the increasingly competitive world markets, and running his workers out of jobs. He is no fool, but prosperity tolerates foolishness, and now that the consequences are coming in, he is sticking on the Pay Board with the outrageous argument that the fat cats are trying to drive him off it. Nevertheless, what prosperity failed to do, adversity is doing. George is putting up a big smoke screen but is finally retreating into common sense.

Slowly Adjusted

Similarly, the business conservatives have been proclaiming the glories of Adam Smith, the free market place, and the wonders of competition, but now that the Japanese and the Germans have mated the arts of the computer and the scientific revolution with lower wages, the welfare state and the planned economy, they are slowly adjusting, like Meany, to controls. If it didn't hurt so much, it would be funny, for the Republicans are now backing controls, and the old Democratic New Dealers who invented them, are arguing for a little more freedom.

President Nixon has led this parade back to reality. It is easy to demonstrate that he has no clear political philosophy — which is a troubling thought — but at least he is not a prisoner of his past prejudices. He has made the historic and strategic opening to Peking, though following it with a dance of doubt and clumsy tactical moves to protect his right-wing Republican flank, but still he has made it.

And now, confronted with a potentially disastrous financial and trade problem in the world, he has finally scrapped his ideological approach to the Soviet Union, and has sent off Secretary of Commerce Stans and a 10-man delegation to seek a substantial increase in trade with Moscow.

NIXON
. . . back to reality

Like Meany, Nixon knew all along that the ideological approach to trade didn't keep the Soviet government from getting even the most sophisticated computers and scientific equipment from West Germany and Japan. After Willy Brandt made his peace with Moscow, and the Japanese started flying their commercial planes and sending their diplomatic and commercial agents to Moscow, the point was clear.

Even the most intricate American computers and other modern devices were going from Europe and Japan to the Soviet Union — all with the knowledge of the C.I.A. and years ago. But it was only when the American economy got into serious trouble in the world that it was possible to face the fact.

Nixon reads the returns — economic as well as political. In the third quarter of 1971, the United States had the largest balance of payments deficit — the difference between what the country takes in and what it spends abroad — in the history of the Republic.

Traditional Republican

He is a traditional Republican. Every party has its nightmare, and the nightmare of the Republican party is economic trouble — after all, the Republicans were out of power for 28 out of 36 years because the Democrats exploited and ran successfully against "The Hoover Depression," and nobody knows this better than Richard Nixon.

Accordingly, it is no accident that the president has just approved $528 millions in export licenses to ship American equipment and technology to the Soviet Union's big new truck factory on the Kama River.

Not so long ago, he vetoed a deal to have Henry Ford enter into a similar contract with the Soviet government, but that was when the economic slump at home didn't seem quite so ominous.

The objective facts are not really very different. Germany, Japan, and Britain, among others have been shipping sophisticated modern scientific and industrial equipment to the Soviet Union for years. Washington refused to do so, when it was prosperous, on ideological grounds, but since the recession and the unemployment, with an election coming up, it is taking a different view.

It is looking for business and votes. It is being forced by the bad economic news to do the things which it wanted to do, but could not quite do in good times.

Subdue Those Baser Instincts

It appears that Victoria, the wealthy capital of beautiful British Columbia, to what should be its utmost shame, is going to fail again to reach its United Appeal objective.

One does not have to be a mathematician to realize that as the Greater Victoria population is nearing two hundred thousand, if half its citizens averaged eight dollars apiece the Appeal would be well over the top. Having been a canvasser I know that many people with only average incomes give from $25 up into the hundreds. This means that many, many give meagre donations or nothing at all.

Whenever I feel a stingy streak about to affect my charitable offerings, I recall two lines from a poem by Edna Jacques:

"But for Thy mercy Lord, Thy bounteous store,
I too might peddle pins from door to door."

These pop into my memory and, needless to say, subdue my baser instincts.—"Disappointed."

For the Cause

Although the United Appeal campaign is not yet completed, I would like through your column, to express my sincere thanks to all those citizens; men and women, young and old, who volunteered their time and energy on behalf of the United Appeal.

Contributions to the United Appeal are not only those of money, but also of time, enthusiasm, and energy on the part of many volunteers who canvass on behalf of the residential campaign. Without them, such a campaign could never be launched.

My sincere "thank you" to each and every one.—Shirley Baker, Residential Chairman, 1971.

Dedication Essential

"Thetis Lake Park" conjures up the vision of our unique beauty spot so near the heart of Greater Victoria. But to real estate developers it conjures up a vision of dollars. Also, unfortunately, the representatives in our many municipal divisions quarrel over who should pay. Many forget that the first necessity is to co-operate in buying up that 245 acres west of Upper Thetis Lake, before it is too late. The other essential is to dedicate the present and future enlarged Thetis Lake area for park use only — instead of risking its loss by gambling on getting more money from some other municipal authority for undesignated land.

If citizens of Greater Victoria want to safeguard lovely Thetis Lake, their only hope is to vote solely for candidates who are not hedging but are working together for the enlargement and dedication of Thetis Lake Park.—Mr. and Mrs. R. T. F. Thompson, 309 - 1060 Pakington Ave.

Unique Area

May I urge you to use all of your influence to prevent the division and pollution of the Thetis Lake watershed. This unique area cannot be duplicated. It is just 20 minutes by car from the University. It is a natural laboratory. In the research phase of field biology the student has access the year round. As a beauty spot it is priceless. As a park it could be a splendid example of conservation, too few of which exist today. Both from an educational and recreational viewpoint, we cannot afford to let this area go. — Mrs. H. R. Hanson, 1905 Mayfair Dr.

The Friends Advance

I was most surprised to read Pat McGeer's reaction to the incidents in Stewart as reported in your "Denial of democracy."

Surely Mr. McGeer should know that democracy does not exist when friends of the Social Credit Party are concerned and this incident in Stewart is by no means isolated when one thinks of the record of this government over the years. Of course the action of the government in Stewart was most improper but the shouting one heard concerning the pipe-line to the Island, when the government accepted the highest bidder, seems to have died down.

If one will only take a look at some of the friends of Social Credit and examine their positions when they joined Social Credit and today one will see that Stewart is not an isolated instance and I am only surprised that Pat McGeer is naive enough to feel that this is something out of the usual pattern. — M. P. R. Wrixon, 1680 Poplar.

In Praise of the Young

One hears a great deal of criticism of young people these days; but recently in the busy shops where many are employed, I have received the best of attention, politeness and efficiency.

I have also frequently noticed young men and women giving up their seats in the bus to older people. There is still much good in the world.

"There is so much good in the worst of us, And so much bad in the best of us, That it ill behooves any of us To speak ill of the rest of us" — Dorothy Abraham, 1125 Faithful.

60 Years Ago

From the Times of Nov. 25, 1911:

PARIS — Dr. Sun Yat Sen outlined the future regime in China in Le Courriere European during his stay in Paris. According to this journal he said that altogether it would be a federal republic and essentially modern; care would be taken not to touch the ancient traditions of old China, such as public censure and the ancient language of the Mandarins.

"The revolutionists wish," added Dr. Sen, "to prove by abstention from violence, their sympathies with peace."

Marshall McLuhan: A Utopian Vision Down the Drain

By GEORGE WOODCOCK
The Nation

It has become a commonplace in discussing the effect of the media in modern society to point to the way in which reputation can be instantly made, and lost with almost equal rapidity.

The situation is all the more piquant when this happens to a media figure like Marshall McLuhan. Remembering his career, one is tempted to adapt the slogan of a celebrated gasoline advertisement which for some reason he overlooked in compiling The Mechanical Bride: "That's McLuhan — that was!"

It is true that, as a disturbing sport among academics, McLuhan has been in evidence for twenty years. But neither The Mechanical Bride (1951) nor even The Gutenberg Galaxy (1962) marked the real beginning of his brief reign as a mod hero.

That came with the publication of Understanding Media (1964), a thinly veiled celebration of the impending reign of the electronic media and the return to tribalism, now universalized.

All the basic ideas of that book (and McLuhan really has few ideas, but repeats them often in varied forms) had in fact been sketched in The Gutenberg Galaxy, and the notion of swimming with the maelstrom had made its appearance in The Mechanical Bride.

But in Understanding Media McLuhan translated his gospel from academic hieratic into Madison Avenue demotic, and stunned many apparently intelligent people into accepting a highly exaggerated view of the role of electronic communications in our lives.

More Reading

None of the curious intermedial volumes in which, after Understanding Media, McLuhan tried to develop a mosaic of picture and aphorism (in a vain attempt to evade the charge that he used print to declare the end of print), made an impression like that of his earlier books, and their failure confirmed the implications of the continuing success of the paperback revolution in publishing: that under modern conditions people are in fact reading more than they did a generation ago, and that the Gutenberg dynasty remains in control of a very large territory in the Western consciousness.

Since 1964, moreover, there is evidence that, like mosquitoes resisting DDT, the human mind is learning to absorb television without the extraordinary changes in consciousness McLuhan predicted.

We have not yet become global village enough to diminish the passions of nationalism; indeed, to give an example very close to the bone when dealing with McLuhan, the spread of television in Canada, and particularly the prevalence of American shows, has been followed by an upsurge of national feeling, a strong reaction against the very influences that not long ago made it seem as though North America might become the prototype of the global village.

I do not know how far the evident failure of his teachings to work out in the short run has affected McLuhan; recently he has withdrawn into the academic fastness from which he emerged. But it is certain that during the past three or four years his influence has waned, and I doubt if there are many ardent McLuhanites left except among slightly unfashionable PR officers and belated Op artists.

And now the burial beetles are at work on his reputation; interestingly, they are led by late disciples. The authors of the most recent books, Jonathan Miller and Donald F. Theall, are former McLuhanites turning against the master, Miller in total opposition and Theall in that spirit of revisionism which to the faithful always seems worse than downright rejection.

Having held even at the height of general McLuhanacy the critical attitude of the working journalist, who knows that things are never as simple as aphorists and myth makers declare, I find it hard to resist the kind of I-told-you-so smugness which anarchists used to adopt toward Trotskyists when they talked of Stalin.

It is easy — all too easy — to say: How could you really believe McLuhan's nonsense about TV being tactile? How could you swallow those absurd assurances that an Eskimo lived in an auditory world when his very survival as a hunter depended on a visual sense that read the landscape as accurately as any of us reads a page of print?

How could you allow McLuhan that insolent claim that the front page of a newspaper, with its "instantaneous mosaic," is somehow less rather than more visual than the page of a book?

Yet McLuhan remains a phenomenon that has to be acknowledged. Even after his vogue has dissipated, some of his works will remain as curiosities in the history of Western culture.

The Gutenberg Galaxy, for example, is likely to be read for the very feature that the later McLuhan would have dismissed as irrelevant — its content. It is, like Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy or Proudhon's De la Justice, one of those compendia of strange knowledge that omnivorous readers will find entertaining long after the argument has ceased to be topical.

Elitist Gloss

And even his earlier scholarly essays, recently collected in The Interior Landscape, plodding and murkily written though they may be, are interesting because of the tradionalist and elitist gloss which they provide on his later work.

The study of this earlier McLuhan, the search for the roots of his later ideas in his Canadian origins, in his convert's Catholicism, in his admiration for Joyce, Eliot and Wyndham Lewis, provides the most interesting chapters in both Miller's Marshall McLuhan and Theall's The Medium is the Rear View Mirror.

Unfortunately, Miller becomes so involved in tracing McLuhan's debt to Innis and Whorf and Giedion and the prairie Populists and the Sophist tradition that he leaves little room for what one had imagined to be the purpose of books in the Modern Masters series, the lucid exposition and criticism of the chosen writers.

It seems obvious that a consciousness of space running out induced him to concentrate on the books up to Galaxy, and to say virtually nothing about Understanding Media or anything later.

Yet it is in Understanding Media that McLuhan's most pernicious maxim, "The medium is the message," was worked out in such a way that the leaders of industrial and advertising corporations adopted him briefly as an instant guru; that monstrous half-truth, implying that content is irrelevant, seemed for a time to be accepted as a white flag offered on behalf of the whole intellectual community — offered not merely because McLuhan's growing determinism made him regard the triumph of the electronic media as inevitable, but also because he desired the recreation of a community hostile to the intellect.

It is in Understanding Media that McLuhan finally reveals himself in all his effrontery as the know-all know nothing, a character worthy of the imagination of his master Wyndham Lewis.

There are good things in Miller's little book. As a doctor knowledgable in neurology, he is able to pick apart very effectively McLuhan's assumptions regarding the coordination of the senses, and as a television man he can show how McLuhan's theories fail to work out in the practice of the media.

But his general hostility to his subject weakens his case. One reacts with incredulity to the dismissal of all of McLuhan as "a gigantic system of lies." It is of course something far more insidious — a gigantic chaos of half-truths.

Here — as well as in his fuller treatment of his subject — Theall is more credible than Miller. While the most Miller will allow McLuhan is that he sets us thinking, Theall does him the justice of granting that, despite his monstrous exaggerations and his pedantic ways of shocking the pedants, McLuhan has spotted some genuine trends in our society.

What Theall does not develop clearly is the process by which the trend-spotter became the trend-setter. I still think the book which McLuhan has since rejected as obsolete, The Mechanical Bride, is his most true and useful book, since here he is merely revealing, with some acuteness, the way in which advertising both reflects and molds the attitudes of our world.

It is when, in his later books, he himself takes a role in molding attitudes, and does so by intellectually dubious means, that McLuhan becomes one of the great exemplars in our generation of "la trahison des clercs."

I am always surprised that, except for a few rather slight hints in the essays Raymond Rosenthal collected in McLuhan: Pro and Con (still the best book on McLuhan), nobody — and that includes Miller and Theall — has examined seriously McLuhan's role as the leading Utopian fantasist since Huxley and Orwell, or the way this role is related to the fact that his transformation into a prophet took place in Canada.

Seen as a great false metaphor for the ideal society, McLuhan's vision reflects in its form the discredit that in recent years had fallen on the conventional Utopia.

As a detailed model of an ideal society, Utopia began to lose its appeal as soon as the first signs of the welfare state appeared, and the failure of a Utopia in time present — i.e., Communist Russia — resulted in the inversion of Utopia in the future into a negative vision, pioneered by E. M. Forster and Zamiatin, developed by Huxley and Orwell.

But the desire persisted for some kind of Utopian pattern in which human alienation could be shown ending in a culture that reunited man's nature as well as his society; it persisted especially among Catholic converts who fervently believed in their own kind of vanished golden age.

Man came out of a tribal world, where the unity of the group protected him psychologically as well as physically from the hostility in the darkness outside the circle of the tribal fire. Let him return to a worldwide tribalism, a global village, in which a balance of all the senses and a reconciliation of intellect and emotion would at last prove itself superior to nature and transform the earth into a vast artifact.

Once one considers it in this way, McLuhan's vision is seen to have a great deal in common with many Utopian novels, and here I am not merely talking about the incidental anticipations of electronic devices which one finds in books like Bellamy's Looking Backward.

Much more impressive is the forecast in Forster's The Machine Stops, written about 60 years ago, of a world where man's fate is actually determined by a technological structure he himself has created and which brilliantly anticipates the type of communications network McLuhan imagines as the arterial structure of world tribalism.

Oral Is Best

Even more interesting is the anti-intellectualism, the prejudice against a literary or even a literate culture, that pervades so many Utopias. Even in Utopia itself there is a strong suggestion that oral is superior to written discourse, and Swift's Utopians, the Houyhnhnms, like the inhabitants of Plato's golden age, have no writing and are the wiser and more moral for the lack; the same applies to the underground people in Herbert Read's The Green Child.

In the anti-Utopias the attack on literacy becomes an attack on thought. Anything but the most elementary intellectual activity is forbidden in the worlds of We and 1984 and Brave New World, and in the last of these, technological advances are used, as McLuhan envisages, simply to cultivate and gratify all the senses. In Huxley's novel there is also a kind of world tribalism, exemplified particularly in the ritual orgies of its people.

Though he acknowledges no debt to Huxley, what McLuhan poses as inevitable and therefore — by its Panglossian logic — desirable, is something very near to a realization of Brave New World.

The flaw in the vision is that he does not take into account that serpent in the electronic Eden, content; man will still want to eat of the Tree of Knowledge, and from that reality McLuhan can escape no more than he now escapes the tyranny of print.

Garrison People

That a late-blooming Utopian vision should emerge in Canada is not surprising, particularly if one remembers the teachings of another and more reasonable Canadian guru of world fame, Northrop Frye.

Writing on Canadian literature, Frye has developed the thesis that traditionally Canada was a garrison society, a society of pioneers whose situation until the recent wave of urbanization was analogous to that of a tribal people, with the northern wilderness fulfilling the same role of circumambient enmity as the African forest.

One can go beyond Frye to remark that, since a common fear creates unity in tribal and garrison communities alike, they have no need of Utopian visions. It is when human societies loosen out into civilizations, and the sense of community dissipates, that the dream of ideal worlds in past or future emerges.

The Homeric Greeks, if one is to believe the epics, had no thought of either a lost golden age or an ideal Platonic republic. Similarly, one of the striking features of Canadian literature until recently was the almost complete absence of Utopias or anti-Utopias; keeping the watch in the garrison was the important task.

But now, in a mere generation, Canada has passed out of the pioneer phase, Canadian critics like Frye himself have begun to study Utopian myths, and Canadian "poetes manques" like McLuhan have begun to create Utopian visions.

The fact that what to Forster and Huxley was anti-Utopia should have become Utopia to McLuhan may be an alarming symptom of the degree of alienation in the collective Canadian psyche, struggling toward self-recognition, yet plagued by dissension.

It may also be merely an externalization of McLuhan's own plight, of a longing for the return, at any cost, to human dignity, to the great warm womb of the tribal unconscious.

Hatred for the Young (2)

By RICHARD NEEDHAM

We decided yesterday — well, anyway, I did — that the hostility between young and old might be traced to the expectations of parents. They want their kids to grow up in a certain way; the kids respond by growing up in a totally different way. The parents feel the kids "owe" them something for all the money and love lavished on them; the kids refuse to acknowledge, let alone repay, the indebtedness.

I don't say this is "right" or "wrong" of the kids, or of their parents either; I simply say that's how it is, that's how it's been for centuries. Sharper than a serpent's tooth and all that jazz. There are other, equally antique, reasons for the battle between the generations.

For example, there's the North American worship of youthfulness — being and looking and acting "young" — coupled with the North American fear of age — being and looking and acting "old". Men dye their hair and wear wigs in order to look 10 years younger, women spend billions on guck which promises the same result. ("Thinks to herself: He forgets that I'm 97.") As Edgar Friedenberg says in The Vanishing Adolescent, people who are so determined to stay young will naturally resent those who really are young — who don't need to wear wigs or put on guck.

Again, there's the matter of "success", whatever that is. Most older people believe (whether they admit it or not) that they've botched up their lives, made wrong and irreversible decisions; they had their chance, as we all do, and blew it. They've failed and they're trapped in that failure; their future's behind them; all they can do is put in time until they retire or die. Feeling this way, they naturally cast a bleak eye on the young, who aren't trapped — yet.

As Friedenberg remarks, "Young people, who really do have their lives ahead of them, and who have not yet begun in earnest to make the least of their opportunities, are bound to arouse mixed feelings in their elders. They arouse genuine concern; it is excruciating to watch a youngster, especially one who refuses to listen to you, making what you are quite sure are serious mistakes. But at a deeper level, it may be even more painful when he does not make them, or when they turn out not to be mistakes; when he grasps and holds what eluded you, or what you dared not touch and have dreamed of ever since."

Next comes dat ole debbil sex. Youthful sexuality is certainly more out in the open than it was 20, 30 or 40 years ago; but whether there actually is more of it, I don't know. I could tell you some gorgeous stories about my own romantic flings — and those of others my age — in the Toronto of the early 1930s. Oh, the things that went on in the back seats of the Alhambra Theatre at Bloor and Bathurst, with an ice cream soda at Peter's afterwards!

But most old and middle-aged people today think (whether it's true or not) that there's been a great change. They think the young of today are making love every hour on the hour, and each time with a different partner, and this upsets them — (1) because they didn't get all these frolics when they were young and (2) because the penalty was much higher when they were young (no morning-after pill in those days) and (3) because they feel that in their 40 or 50 or 60 years' life, they haven't made much of a mark in the romance department; in the sex department, anyhow.

Hooked in with what you might call youth-envy, success-envy and sex-envy, is what I'd call life-envy. The old entertain the illusion (and what an illusion it is) that the young are happy, carefree, adventurous, bursting with joie-de-vivre. "The best years of your life." Ha, they're the worst. But the older people don't know this, or else they've forgotten it, and that's another source of hostility. Unhappy people hate those who are — or appear to be, or "ought" to be — happy.

Finally, one perceives among older people the fear of change, disorder, loss of control. This fear seems to me comical; the mass of young people I encounter are as square, as timid, as hide-bound as the mass of their parents. But a small minority of the young make rebellious noises, and this alarms older people who cling so desperately to their homes, their jobs, their set ways and ideas, the tight framework they've worked hard and long to put around themselves.

Is there no sound reason, then, for the hostility which the old feel toward the young — and which is so enthusiastically returned? I think there is one sound reason — a big one, a completely new one — and I'll examine it in the third and final article of this series tomorrow.

Marijuana Judgment Held After Crown Argues Back

The marijuana trial of 23-year-old Richard V. Bird was adjourned to Dec. 3 for judgment Wednesday.

Bird was arrested Aug. 29 at the Black Ball ferry terminal and charged with bringing about 75 pounds of marijuana to the city in a camper-truck. The truck had arrived on the ferry from Port Angeles.

Defence counsel Edward Pollard argued Tuesday that the Crown had not proved importation had taken place three miles from the city when the accused entered Canadian waters.

Pollard also said prosecutor Cecil Branson had failed to prove the accused a Canadian citizen. The Criminal Code states consent of the Attorney-General of Canada is required for proceedings if an accused is an alien.

The defence counsel said the Crown also failed to prove that the accused's camper-truck had come from another country. Pollard added that it wasn't clear which act Bird had been charged under.

Branson in Wednesday's reply said Bird had been charged properly under section five of the Narcotic Control Act, dealing with illegal importing or exporting of a narcotic to or from Canada.

He said the accused was charged with Victoria as the port of entry and this was consistent with the Criminal Code.

NO NEED

The Code says the county goes to the boundaries of the province. The prosecutor noted that the county of Victoria where Bird was charged exists to the three mile limit.

Branson said the act of importation was a "continuing offence" at least to the point where a person should declare merchandise such as Customs.

He said it was not incumbent on the Crown to prove Bird was not a citizen of Canada.

He said there was no evidence Bird was an alien.

The prosecutor said it was "pure and simple conjecture" on the part of the defence to think the M. V. Coho stopped anywhere on its trip between Port Angeles and Victoria Aug. 29.

He noted that the ship's mate called earlier said the Coho went from Port Angeles, Washington, to Victoria.

Branson pointed to the statement of Bird, admitted as evidence earlier, which said he was stopped at the Black Ball ferry terminal by Customs after a three-day trip by truck from Mexico.

Victoriana Case Urged

The province should be asked to finance carefully selected bits of Victoriana, preservation historian Dr. S. W. Jackman said Wednesday.

Jackman, acting head of the department of history at University of Victoria, addressed a luncheon meeting of the Men's Canadian Club.

As examples of government-supported historical sites, Jackman cited Upper Canada Village in Ontario and Barkerville in B.C.

"We should have at least one good example of a Victorian gingerbread house, for example, but they don't all have to be saved," he said.

Selection is important because it must be decided whether the building to be torn down would be better for the community than the expressway or apartment block which would replace it, he said.

Thetis Dilemma Looms Again

City council will again be faced with the issue of Thetis Lake Park, Capital Regional District directors were told Wednesday.

Victoria Ald. Clyde Savage said he will bring up the park "in the near future" to at least try and dedicate the land as park "until it is turned over to the region."

City council recently decided against Savage's suggestion that the land be dedicated as park.

Victoria Mayor Courtney Haddock said the park should be left as it is.

The city didn't want to subdivide it but "I'm fighting for the assets of the people of Victoria. We have asked the province not to permit the subdivision alongside it. There will be no dissipation of the assets of the city as long as I'm mayor."

Victoria Ald. Percy Frampton agreed with Haddock, but approved of efforts being made to purchase 245 acres alongside the park.

The comments were prompted by a letter from the Victoria branch of the Sierra Club of B.C.

RAISE SUGGESTED

The club agreed with the regional board that the existing park purchase priority program should not be changed. However, it did suggest raising the present half-mill levy for park acquisition.

"When one sees assets such as Thetis Park threatened for lack of sufficient funds, then a raise in taxes surely is justified," the club said.

In a separate letter to Victoria city council, the club urged dedication of the land as a park or turning it over to the regional district "for a nominal sum for the good of the whole of the Greater Victoria area.

"It is just not good sense to expect the board to purchase it for a huge sum when their existing park priority program is strained to the limit now."

The club said if the regional board was responsible for the park, "they would no doubt then be in a better position to consider ways and means to secure the 245 acres of lake watershed to act as a safe buffer zone from eventual pollution from the subdivision."

Owner of the 245 acres, Thetis Park Estates Ltd., applied recently to the B.C. highways department for approval of a subdivision plan. The department did not grant approval.

In other business, the regional board:

JUNK CARS

- Authorized executive director Dennis Young to proceed with plans to implement a collection system for old car bodies and to locate disposal points to which derelict cars can be taken by the public;
- Authorized Douglas Rotary Club to build a new concession in the area of the now-demolished Black Swan cafe in Elk-Beaver Lake regional park. The concession will be owned by the district;
- Approved investigation of "all aspects" of ownership of a building to accommodate regional district staff. Special attention is to go to leasing space not immediately required. This move would help to generate sufficient revenue so the building will be self-supporting. The district now has leased offices in Burnes House, Bastion Square;
- Agreed with Sooke director Howard Elder's motion to withdraw a resolution urging the district to assume the function of the Greater Victoria Water Board;
- Tabled a motion by Savage that the executive committee look into the ramifications of the region taking on the bus system and being represented at negotiations between the Greater Vancouver regional district and B.C. Hydro towards a takeover.

Store Convicted Of Selling Short

The department of consumer and corporate affairs waited so long before laying a shortweighting charge against a food store that it was difficult to prepare a defence, lawyer D. H. Gray claimed Wednesday.

He made the remark after his client, Parkland Meat Co., operator of Wakeham's Quality Meats, 2565 Sinclair, was convicted on two counts of shortweighting.

Judge Edmond St. Torre fined the company $50.

Gray contended that the lapse of time between the offences and court proceedings had made it impossible for his client to prepare a proper defence.

The store was convicted of selling a three-pound, 3½ ounce cross rib roast as three pounds, 10 ounces, May 7. The price was $3.60.

POSED AS CUSTOMER

The store was also convicted of shortweighting by one ounce a one-pound porterhouse steak, costing $1.80.

The purchases were made both by Herbert Underwood of Coquitlam, an inspector with the department.

Underwood testified earlier that he purchased meat May 7 posing as a customer and went to his motel where he weighed the meat on approved scales about an hour later.

Gray said Underwood never identified himself as an inspector and months later the store's staff had trouble remembering the sale exactly while preparing for trial.

MANY SALES

The defence counsel said the store was not informed until about three weeks after the sale that there was to be legal action.

Gray said there had been many meat sales to numerous customers in the store since May.

He asked St. Jorre to view the offences as accidental.

Prosecutor Ian Stewart said it "doesn't go to mitigation to take a kick at the Crown" following conviction.

Plans Announced

TORONTO (CP) — The Canadian domestic communications satellite Anik should be launched between Nov. 1 and 15, 1972 and if all goes well be operational by January, 1973, D. A. Golden, president of Telesat Canada, said Wednesday.

Hepatitis Cases Home

Two cases of hepatitis, both children living on houseboats off the federal government wharf near Sidney, have been successfully treated and the children are back at home, senior medical health officer Dr. J. O. M. Whitbread said Wednesday.

He said the health board has been encouraging houseboats to connect to sewer systems and to have a garbage disposal service. He added that houseboats are safe and adequate places to live if these perecautions are taken.

A marina bylaw proposed by the board, which requires adoption by municipalities before it takes effect, would clean up many sewage pollution problems at mooring places, said Whitbread.

Gati's Slavic Program Applauded

By AUDREY JOHNSON
Times Staff

VANCOUVER — Two Victoria musicians were given an enthusiastic reception from a large audience in the Queen Elizabeth Theatre Wednesday night.

The event, second in a Centennial Festival series sponsored by the Vancouver Sun, brought Laszlo Gati, Victoria Symphony conductor, to the podium of the Vancouver Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor.

Soloist in the difficult Khachaturian D Major concerto was pianist Linn Hendry who is now studying and performing in London, England, after spending the last four years as a pupil of Victoria Conservatory principal Robin Wood.

Also a guest on the program was Canadian actor Bruno Gerussi.

VIVID READING

It was an altogether unique and highly colorful program with emphasis on the Slavic music that Gati interprets with such insight. Under his baton the readings of Dvorak's Scherzo Capriccioso and the Kodaly Peacock variations were vivid and assured, temperamentally expressive while firmly controlled.

The orchestra was responsive and the fine large string section gave the conductor all the sweep and rich cantabile that he called for in the Smetana Moldau.

Strength is of little value without sensitivity and both are essential when conducting such a performance as the concerto. Here rapport must be created, not over a period of time, but virtually on the instant, and in this Gati and Miss Hendry were impressively successful.

The concerto is virtuosic to a high degree, offering considerable problems for the pianist, but Miss Hendry was always on top. Her performance shone with a freshness, clarity, beauty of tone and dynamic energy that was highly effective.

She has a special vitality and poise that bodes well for a concert stage career.

The unique highlight of the program came with the performance of And God Created Great Whales, a composition involving electronic tapes of the "songs" of Humpback whales, recorded in the Atlantic Ocean near Bermuda.

American composer Alan Hovhaness has woven a fascinating orchestral tapestry about the taped "singing" which is something of a sighing wailing sound, rising and falling.

Words have been added by Canadian writer Gary Dunford and with what a fine ear for the surging rhythms of the sound patterns and with what a pleasing sense of imagery.

Pay Curbs Proposed For Hospital Staffs

OTTAWA (CP) — Hospital pay rates will likely continue climbing unless new controls are devised, suggests a federal study made public Wednesday.

This would mean a significant increase in the billions Canadians spend annually for health care.

Salaries and wages last year represented 70 per cent of all hospital costs which themselves were nearly 64 cents of the personal health-care dollar.

The study by the health department found that pay of non-supervisory hospital workers climbed an average 63 per cent between 1962 and 1969. The surge likely continued into 1970, with prospects for another upswing being felt this year.

The study says hospital pay rates should be expected to rise at least as much as the consumer price index, which now is mounting again after a brief stable period.

RAISES EATEN UP

But it might be more realistic to expect a rise greater than the index, says the study, because from 1962 to 1969 up to 35 per cent of the increases for nurses were offset by higher prices and another 30 per cent by higher taxes.

This meant that nurses realized only about 35 per cent more personal disposable income.

Experts say the findings have great significance for control of hospital costs. To offset further wage and salary rises, hospital authorities would have to take such steps as changing the number and type of personnel and making better use of personnel to produce greater efficiency and greater productivity.

The employees have considereable mobility and growing union strength to combat efforts to hold down their wage and salary scales.

A further pressure on hospital costs is a slow but steady reduction in hours of the average work week, says the study. The numbers of employees must increase to provide the same number of hours of service.

MORE FOR TOP NURSES

Some other observations on the 1962-69 period:

- Salaries of graduate supervisory nurses tend to increase at a faster rate than registered general duty nurses.
- Percentage gains in pay tended to be greater for women than for male hospital workers.
- Increase in hospital pay rates in percentage terms exceeded the increase in all other industries except logging.
- Hospital pay for dietary and housekeeping and maintenance and service personnel were among the highest if not the highest in the service industries.

PAPERWORK DELAYS ST. JOSEPH PROGRESS

Four months after agreement on expansion of St. Joseph's Hospital, development is still delayed by paperwork.

Jim Cumming, chairman of the Capital Region hospital board, said Wednesday he understands a complicated land survey and legal preparation for a multitude of small land transfers has now been completed.

It is anticipated the major transfers of land and titles will be completed within three weeks, he told the regional board meeting later in the day.

Four parties are involved in the problem. The Sisters of St. Ann, who founded the hospital and are now turning it over to a public society, are also selling 4¾ acres alongside for hospital expansion.

The regional hospital board is the agency charged with area hospital planning and financing. As well, there is the Southern Vancouver Island Hospital Society, the body designated to take over operation of St. Joseph's, and Victoria city, involved because its road patterns are affected.

Almost two years of bickering over such things as land titles, lease arrangements, road closures and rights of way preceded last July's agreement.

Prominent in the disputes was Health Minister Ralph Loffmark, who finally drafted the agreement all parties signed in July.

There has been no outward sign of progress since then. The current point of dispute between the regional hospital board and the society's board appears to be over funds for planning.

No funds have been granted the society by the regional board and apparently won't be until the major transfers take place.

Cumming said funds for building have been exhausted and a referendum on hospital expansion must be put to regional ratepayers next year. He said planning at St. Joseph's must catch up to other hospitals before the referendum.

Cowichan Band Fires Its First Constable

By DONNA CLEMENTS

DUNCAN — A "shocked and dismayed" Larry Joe was dismissed Wednesday as Cowichan Indian Band constable.

The band immediately started looking for a replacement for Joe, who was the band's first policeman.

Joe, 25, father of three children, said today: "I can't understand why they would ask for my resignation. I feel I was doing a good job.

"The only reason I can think of is that I was going into nothing but debt in this job and the council didn't have any money to pay my expenses. I started to put a little pressure on them for the money.

A band councillor, who didn't want to be named, said Joe was asked to resign because they received several complaints that he wasn't doing his job and they grew tired of his "continually threatening council that if we didn't give him more money for expenses that he would quit.

"I think we were pretty lenient with him," the councillor said. "One of the main complaints we received was that people could never reach him when they needed him."

Joe claims the council has never really supported him since he became constable at the end of May after taking a training course at CFB Naden. Since then he has worked closely with the RCMP detachment.

Joe said the funds were so low for the job that he "feels fortunate to have even received his $400 monthly salary."

'WOULDN'T PAY'

One of the requirements for the position was that the constable had to supply his own car. Joe said he bought an old police vehicle for $1,700 but felt the band council should have helped pay the car insurance which was over $400.

"It was that high because I would be using it on patrol. I feel they could have helped me with it."

Joe said the council owes him about $800 for mileage which wasn't paid to him for the past four months.

"They promised to pay me 15 cents a mile. They advised me to patrol the reservation frequently because that was one of the main reasons for the job but when they received my bill for about $200 they wouldn't pay it."

Joe said he was planning to quit at the end of December if they didn't "come across with any money but they jumped the gun." Joe said the band just received a $1,000 grant but he never received any of it.

"I am still in a state of shock," he said. "I guess I'll have to try to find another job somewhere. I think they should still pay me the expense money they owe me."

Joe said he worked an average of 20 hours a day and non-stop on weekends.

"If I wasn't doing my job it is because I couldn't drive my car after September because I couldn't afford insurance and they wouldn't help me buy it. I drove my wife's car occasionally on patrol, but if I had an accident her insurance wouldn't cover it either."

The band councillor admitted the band is short of expense money for the constable. He claims they did budget enough to pay his salary and mileage but they didn't expect it to be so high.

"We didn't think it was our responsibility to buy a car and pay for the insurance. Other band employees have to supply their own vehicle.

TSE Changes Its Stand

TORONTO (CP) — The Toronto Stock Exchange has put before an Ontario government committee a proposal to allow foreign-owned securities firms to expand their Canadian business as long as they sell some of their ownership stock to Canadians.

The proposal appears to represent a change in its position on the question of foreign ownership. The latest statement from the exchange is sharply different from those made during hearings held earlier this fall by a special committee appointed by the government.

The new proposal, presented by exchange counsel A. J. MacIntosh, would allow foreign-owned firms to increase their size by selling new ownership shares to Canadians.

The previous proposal was that growth of foreign firms operating in Canada be restricted unless they sell control to Canadians.

WESTCOAST RULING RESERVED BY BOARD

VANCOUVER (CP) — The National Energy Board has reserved decision on an application by Westcoast Transmission for permission to expand its gas-gathering system in northern British Columbia.

The board was told at a hearing that the Fort St. John natural-gas fields should be able to supply customers for at least another 60 years.

Peter Kutney, Westcoast vice-president of gas supplies and sales, said that since 1964 exploratory wells drilled in a 28,000-square-mile wedge-shaped area in the Fort St. John region have shown a reserve growth of about 181 billion cubic feet a year.

Westcoast envisages a $54 million project involving construction of gathering and transmission lines.

Beaver Accepts 'With Regret'

WINNIPEG (CP) — The board of directors of Beaver Lumber Co. Ltd. has decided to recommend that shareholders accept an offer by Molson Industries Ltd. of Montreal for all the common and class A shares of the Winnipeg based company.

In a statement released to shareholders late Wednesday afternoon the board said the loss of independence was viewed "with great regret."

Last week Molson Industries announced an offer of four Molson class A shares and $20 cash for each five common or five class A shares of Beaver Lumber.

K. C. Kennedy, president of Beaver Lumber, said the board's decision was based in part on the fact that Molson purchased 582,800 common shares of Beaver at a price of $18 a share payable in cash immediately prior to making its offer to holders of the common and class A shares of Beaver.

As a result, Kennedy reported, Molson holds at least 18 per cent of the company's common shares.

At the conclusion of the two-day board meeting the directors agreed to recommend the offer after failing in an attempt to negotiate a better price.

Kennedy said that Beaver shareholders who do not accept the offer should be aware that if Molson acquires control, the remaining shareholders will be in the position of holding shares in a subsidiary company.

PILL SLIP COSTS STORE $42,000

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A drug firm that filled a faulty birth control prescription for a woman will have to pay $42,000 in expenses to raise her unexpected child.

That decision was handed down by a Superior Court jury Wednesday for Maxine Pearson, 46, who consumed the wrong drug, a sleeping pill, then became pregnant and gave birth to a son.

The jury decided it will cost $42,000 to raise David, now 6, until he is 21, and that was the judgment levied against Save On Drug Co., where the drug was prescribed.

"We love little David," the mother told the jury. "He is not unwanted but he is unplanned."

Kissinger Jr. Blows Date

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (UPI) — A 10-year-old boy with a friend in high places told reporters Wednesday that President Nixon's trip to Peking is scheduled for next March.

Shocked-looking White House officials, with no woodshed handy, sent him to the back of the presidential plane instead.

The statement came from David Kissinger, son of key presidential adviser Henry Kissinger, aboard the presidential plane as the Nixon party flew to the Western White House to spend U.S. Thanksgiving weekend.

A newswoman had asked Kissinger whether the White House, which has never disclosed the date of the presidential trip to China, was ready to announce the date.

"He's going in March," piped up David, who was with his father.

Presidential press secretary Ron Zeigler rolled his eyes back and shook his head in amazement. Kissinger chided his son and sent him scurrying to a back compartment, with Zeigler following.

Moments later David reappeared and told reporters:

"Mr. Zeigler told me to say I heard that the president was going in March on the radio."

Reporters who witnessed the scene said the White House aides "looked ready to faint."

Nixon has already promised to announce the date before next Wednesday. There have been reports from responsible sources recently that the visit will take place in March or April.

Sheriff's deputies said the lovers may now be in jail together. They won't see much of one another, however. No visits are allowed between female and male prisoners.

CAIRO — When Mohammed Sidky returned from early morning prayers—he found himself locked out of his home. His wife had stacked all the dining room furniture against the door because, she said, she was afraid of burglars. Sidky went along with her until he heard a noise in the bedroom and found a naked man — his wife's lover — in the cupboard.

Sidky locked the man in the cupboard and called police.

OTTAWA — Judge George Collins has written to the Union of Ontario Indians, saying "I should not have said what I did," union president Fred Plains said Wednesday.

Plain also quoted the judge as saying "I didn't really mean it (his remarks) as an insult to Indians as a whole."

Collins made the remarks last week while sentencing a young Indian convicted of assault. He mentioned another young Indian who could "become just another stupid Indian, of which we have many."

VANCOUVER (CP) — A man got Grey Cup Week off to a loud start Tuesday when he fired five shots from a revolver in a room of a downtown hotel.

When police broke into the room, they found a man on the floor, passed out and wearing only shorts.

Bullets had been fired into the television set, walls, ceiling and mattress. Five spent cartridges and 31 live bullets were found together with a revolver.

"It seems like an early Grey Cup starter," a policeman said.

Peter John Wright, 26, of Calgary, has been charged with wilful damage, possession of an unregistered firearm and discharging a firearm.

CAPE TOWN — Lindsay Rich, 62, who underwent a heart transplant operation performed by Dr. Christiaan Barnard 12 days ago, died today in Groote Schuur Hospital in this South African city.

Your budget says "mini-car"... but what do you do with the baby buggy?

Plymouth's got the answer:

'72 CRICKET

It's the happy little car that'll help you come smilin' through

Those first few years, when you're just getting started, can be rough. There's not too much left over for the care and feeding of the family car. Plymouth's answer: Cricket. Cricket was designed for the family on a modest budget.

When is a little car a big car?

When it's a Cricket. Cricket is a 4-door sedan that seats 5 adults quite comfortably. And it has a 14 cubic foot trunk that performs amazing tricks like swallowing baby buggies, suitcases, golf clubs, outboard motors.

So it's big... but will it last?

You bet. The body is a solid, rattle-free unitized structure that will stay that way for a long long time. And to keep it looking new, it gets a 7-step dip-and-spray rust protection treatment. Front fenders are bolted on for easier, lower cost replacement if need be.

Now, about the nuts and bolts

Cricket is powered by a 4 cylinder, 1500 cc. engine that has been tested in all kinds of weather, so Cricket knows all about Canadian winters. The twin-carb version puts out 70 hp. @ 5400 rpm. The transmission is a fully-synchronized 4-speed unit, mounted on the floor. If you prefer, you can get your Cricket with 3-speed automatic.

Cricket handles the way you expect a small car to handle—nimble. It has rack & pinion steering—the direct steering system that's used on many high-priced sports cars. You can turn Cricket around in less than 32 feet. For stopping, Cricket comes on strong with 9.6 inch power disc brakes up front and self-adjusting drum brakes at the rear.

Don't jump to conclusions.

Sure, there are some very good cars in Cricket's price class but don't make any fast decisions until you've taken a demonstration drive in a Cricket. Your local Plymouth dealer will be glad to put one at your disposal and be happy to tell you all you want to know about Cricket.

Take the time to investigate thoroughly. You have to get the most for your investment—and that's where we think Plymouth's got the answer...

Oak Bay Seeks Control of Balconies

Municipal engineer-planner Geoffrey White made recommendations to Oak Bay council's zoning committee Wednesday designed to gain control over construction of balconies on apartments.

The two main restrictions govern size and construction.

White recommended that balconies not be greater in size than 20 per cent of the allowable setback or six feet, whichever is less.

He also advised that balconies should be no more than five feet in height, including exterior wall and glazing.

The committee will recommend White's report in principle and ask other council members for comment.

CARE NEEDED

Prior to studying the report the committee heard a delegation from the Vista Towers apartments who want to have all balconies built within site coverage allowances.

Chairman, Ald. Alan Hoey warned, "We must be careful in making any changes (to the zoning bylaw) that we don't legislate the design of a building into non-existence."

He told the delegation that council, in passing zone D restrictions for apartment construction on Beach, had increased side setbacks from 18 to 30 feet.

Ald. Norman Pimlott said that Fire Chief Bill Pearson was anxious to see balconies built in apartment houses because of the extra safety factor when dealing with elderly residents.

Hoey said the move to include some legislation on balconies in the current bylaw was necessary because, at the present time, there were no restrictions governing size.

Mayor Frances Elford said the amendments would also ensure that balconies could neither be roofed over or glassed in so as to make them part of the main living-space structure.

Consideration was given on introducing legislation that would require all areas in the municipality now zoned for three-storey frame construction to meet restrictions laid down for zone D that demand wider setbacks and reduced site coverage.

White told the committee that before such action was taken it would be essential to carry out an intensive survey of the areas involved.

The committee will recommend that this be done.

Condemning the Metropolitan Board of Health's proposed regulations to govern marina facilities, Hoey said:

"This is a municipal function. The council should go on record that such anti-pollution legislation should be between the marinas and the municipalities rather than all-encompassing regulations, designed to fit a province with many diversificiations."

Dog owners received a reprieve at Wednesday's meeting of the finance committee.

At the last council meeting, Pimlott had proposed to raise licence fees. Wednesday the committee decided they should remain the same — $5 for males and spayed bitches and $10 for unspayed bitches.

However, there will be no more discount rates for early payments.

Pimlott, observing his motion had not received support, quipped:

"I guess I got in the doghouse over that one!"

KEELE, England (UPI)— A stripper appearing at a Keele University event had some competition from the audience — four men and women who jumped on the stage and peeled off their clothes.

The amateur strippers, all students, just stood there until the pro ran off the stage. One student said he thought the amateurs took their action as part of a women's Lib protest.

It's Time, Says Fred, Cats Worked on Unity

By DAN STINSON
Times Staff

VANCOUVER — If the trade-winds die for the moment and if Victoria Cougars continue to rehearse their "getting-to-know-you" theme, they may start winning a few Western Canada Hockey League games.

Essentially, that was the opinion of Victoria coach Fred Hucul here Wednesday night following Cougars' 3-2 loss to Vancouver Nats before 1,055 fans at Kerrisdale Arena.

Actually, there were three prominent reasons for the Cougars' 17th defeat in 24 starts:

(1) Hucul's.
(2) Brian Ogilvie.
(3) Alex Cummings.

Ogilvie, the Nats' impressive centre, made a great move to beat Victoria goalkeeper Darryl Fedorak for the winning goal at 2:10 of the third period.

Cummings was a standout in the Vancouver net as the Nats pulled into a fifth-place tie with Victoria in the Western Division.

"Cummings robbed us all night," admitted Hucul, who also lamented the fact that Cougars had hit goal posts three times. "The goals will start coming once we get to know each other's moves," he insisted.

Recent player trades have resulted in numerous changes. Only 10 of the 17 Cougars who played in the season's opening game on Oct. 9 are still on hand.

One of them — centre Garry Donaldson — was forced to miss Wednesday's game because of a tonsil operation. His hustling, colorful style was noticeably missing as Cougars and Nats struggled through three periods of lacklustre hockey.

Forcing the play for most of the game, the Cougars beat themselves with poor positional play and inaccurate passing in the Nats' zone.

They managed some dangerous rushes, but Cummings was equal to the task as he made a game total of 28 saves, including stops on a breakaway by Len Chalmers and a point-blank shot by Jerry Dudar.

Cummings was beaten on two picture goals. The first by centre Tim Struch, who returned to the lineup following an ankle injury, and the second came off the stick of defenceman Jim Atamanenko as the result of a well-set-up power play.

Dave Andruchiw, Pat Russell and Ogilvie counted the Vancouver goals.

The Nats disrupted Cougar attacks with excellent forechecking, and defenceman Tom Gawryletz supported Cummings with some key defensive plays late in the third period.

The Nats, who also have been shuffling players in and out of camp in an effort to achieve respectability, announced they have acquired Nellie Greene, a 19-year-old defeneeman from Regina Pats. Greene, a regular last year but benched a few weeks ago, was traded to Vancouver for "future considerations."

But as for the Cougars . . .

"Scoring goals is our biggest problem," Hucul said. "We're skating well and everyone is giving 100 per cent. We'll be tough to beat once we start playing as a unit."

Hucul would like to see the jelling occur Saturday night at Memorial Arena when Cougars play host to the Winnipeg Jets.

Draft Looks Sweet When Sabres Sour

By Canadian Press Staff Writer

Punch Imlach must take some consolation from the fact that no matter how low his Buffalo Sabres sink, he'll have another crack at a Gil Perreault or Rick Martin in the National Hockey League's annual draft next June.

In the meantime, the Sabres continued their tailspin Wednesday night, losing 5-3 to the usually hapless Los Angeles Kings while the division leaders continued to dominate —New York Rangers over St. Louis Blues 8-3, Boston Bruins over Philadelphia Flyers 2-1, Montreal Canadiens and Chicago Black Hawks tied 3-3.

In other games, Toronto Maple Leafs nipped Pittsburgh Penguins 2-1 for their fourth straight win and California Golden Seals drubbed Detroit Red Wings 6-1.

Philadelphia is at Boston for tonight's only game.

PRIME PICKING

Imlach has been successful the last two years in snaring prize rookies at the draft—Perreault as the No. 1 pick in Buffalo's inaugural season last year and Martin, the No. 5 choice last June.

Other than veteran goaltender Roger Crozier, who couldn't be faulted if he checked into the nearest hospital to recuperate from shell shock, the two youngsters have been Buffalo's only sign of respectability this season and the only reason the Sabres have managed to stay within one point of Vancouver Canucks and Detroit in the East Division cellar.

Both scored against Los Angeles—Martin his 15th and Perreault No. 10—but ran into an unusually aggressive Kings who pelted Crozier with 44 shots.

Chicago saw their win streak at home stopped at nine, but had to be more than satisfied to settle for the tie when the Canadiens opened a 3-1 lead on goals by Yvan Cournoyer, Frank Mahovlich's 16th and Terry Harper early in the third period.

BACK ON TOP

But the Hawks rebounded in the spirited affair with goals by Bryan Campbell and Danny O'Shea to reclaim a share of first in the West.

Hawk defenceman Keith Magnuson and Montreal's Pete Mahovlich exchanged punches in the first period while tough Cliff Koroll and Montreal winger Marc Tardif squared off later in the game.

The Rangers, who crushed California 12-1 with eight third-period goals in their last start, exploded for six more in the final 20 minutes against St. Louis.

Defenceman Brad Park and Walt Tkaczuk scored two each for the East Division leaders in the third-period blitz on veteran goalie Ernie Wakely. He was removed after New York's eighth goal and rookie Peter McDuffe finished up.

Bobby Rousseau, who scored only four goals all last season for Minnesota North Stars, also scored two for the Rangers, his ninth and 10th of the season.

Toronto's win at Pittsburgh was produced by what is normally a weak point of their offence—the power play. The Leafs fourth in the East scored with a man advantage twice, by linemates Norm Ullman and Paul Henderson, to subdue the injury-ridden Penguins.

A Look at the Argos, Or an Easy-Money Plan

VANCOUVER — The massive buildup that always accompanies the Toronto Argonauts' bid for national eminence in football may be more fact than fiction this year. At least the Argos have made it to the Grey Cup final for the first time in 19 years. And that is a long time losing for a club that banks on an easy-money policy when filling its roster.

Easy money, eh?

Yep, the Argos are one of the richest clubs in the land; and if they attract twice as many fans as Saskatchewan, they eventually must show something for that patronage. With that approach, money is no object, and probably the main reason why the Argos are here this week. It has cost them plenty.

They reached down for $120,000 to get quarterback Joe Theismann of Notre Dame to sign a two-year contract, and that doesn't include his anticipated Grey Cup bonus. They put up another $70,000 for Greg Barton, for each year of a reported five-year pact, just in case Theismann couldn't get the job done. All-American Jim Stillwagon came at a yearly fee of $30,000 and then there is that bargain-basement special. There always is.

That something special is Leon McQuay, the sensational running back who turned out to be Mr. All-Everything in the East this year, and possibly is the one man who will have to be accorded personal attention by Calgary on Sunday.

In the idiom of the times, he is the one guy who can break it all open. And it's unfortunate in a way that the Argos don't have a string on his services for next year, because he's good for the league. So good, that he's going to try his luck in the NFL.

Theismann's Fault Common to Youth

If those are some of the big names that go with the economics of buying a title, who else, pray, is to be feared most by the West? In this humble view, two people: Mel Profit, the towering pass catcher, and Bill Symons, a diminished star who will have to do most of the inside running. He is good, and much better than the catchy phrase: "simply by being there he makes McQuay a more serious threat."

Coach Leo Cahill is blessed indeed to have two such valid ball carriers to go with Theismann's ability to exercise the rollout to perfection at times. But if this may prove irritating to the Calgary defence, it also could be costly if tried too often.

Because, if there is one glaring fault in Theismann's make-up, it is one common to rookies. As Garney Henley, the veteran Hamilton defensive back stated: "He tries to do too much by himself at times."

Theismann just loves to bootleg that ball, and, if he can get free, he undoubtedly is a far more devastating scrambler that his opposite, Jerry Keeling. But he may do it once too often against Calgary, and get hurt. That is the fear, that and Calgary's fearsome front four. In reserve, the Argos have Barton, but he is no Theismann.

Judged from afar, via the magic of the tube, the Argos didn't appear that sharp in winning the East from a tough Hamilton club. And the mere fact that Hamilton did run, and run well, against what has been fairly described as "a good Toronto defence," may find the Stampeders looking for places to carry the ball, rather than relying solely on throwing it which is sometimes their bag.

'Stop McQuay' Is Key to Any Plans

When the Argos came west the first time this season, their assistant coach Frank Johnson, remarked: "I think we're good, but I don't know how good." Frank then referred to the simple statistic that until the B.C. Lion game, the Argos hadn't really been tested, hadn't had a fumble, and hadn't had a turnover, even. In the meantime they had won four games.

Well, the balloon went up that day; the Argos had four turnovers, the Lions won, and Toronto was quickly reduced to ordinary status. Lions' coach Eagle Keys had ordered a simple defence plan. It was "stop McQuay." The Lions didn't really, because McQuay got over 100 yards running, but they did contain him, which is really what the Eagle meant.

And therein, kiddies, lies the key to all the Argo fortunes in this Grey Cup ball game. If they get the "Argo bounce" look out. If they don't, remember Henley's other observation: "Their offence is not as good as you expect it to be." He could have added: It is McQuay who makes it go, and the Argos will be only as good as the Stamps allow him to be.

Which may be enough. True. At least the odds makers think so. The Argos are favored by as much as seven.

But always remember this. Form doesn't dictate the final odds. The bettors do. And Calgary's earlier form in Toronto, when they lost, didn't include Keeling in the lineup.

Easy money? Well, you will have to agree that it is at least significant.

One-Upmanship Contest, Plus Pro Football Action

DALLAS (AP) — It should be something like opening night at the Met in the new $25 million Texas Stadium in suburban Irving on U.S. Thanksgiving Day Thursday.

The double row of millionaire and company suites should see a classic contest of one-upmanship as stoutly fought as any in the famed Diamond Horseshoe. There also will be National Football League action.

To some Texans, having a box at the new stadium is a precious status symbol, which can cost dearly.

One hundred and seventy private suites encircle the 10-acre stadium area, where Dallas Cowboys will play Los Angeles Rams on 91,000 square feet of synthetic turf below. Ranged on two levels, they look like the promenade decks of some gleaming ocean liner.

The suites are approached along soft-lighted corridors with wall-to-wall carpeting, which in turn are reached by floor-to-floor escalators from specially reserved parking places that cut walking to a minimum.

Just to get into this exclusive club means you have to invest $50,000 in a bond to help build the place. The $50,000 guarantees you your private box so you won't have to sit among the other 65,000 fans crowding the stadium, but it doesn't mean you get tickets for the game. However, you can buy 12 of them for the knockdown price of $10 a throw plus a 13th ticket if you need one for a servant to work your private bar.

These tickets, plus parking fees for your three cars, can easily set you back another $1,000 or so each season. College games and other stadium events would, of course, be extra.

When you've got your box and your tickets, there still isn't a chair to sit on until you've fitted the box to suit your taste. That, too, can cost plenty, according to your taste.

But, in the end, you have your own piece of real estate inside the stadium for 35 years or as long as the Cowboys play there. Of course, the box, along with the bond, can be legally sold or transferred if you ever tire of football.

Some boxes are owned by individuals, others by private syndicates to impress their out-of-town clients with some lavish entertaining.

Fourteen are specially leased on a three-year option for an annual fee of $15,000. This includes one minute of commercial time on the stadium's computer-controlled scoreboard during time-outs or breaks in the game.

Clarke Top Bat For Third Year

Dave Clarke was again rewarded for his prowess with a bat when members of the Victoria and District Cricket Association held their annual awards dinner Wednesday night.

Clarke, the versatile ace of the Castaways club, made it a remarkable string of consistency and excellence when he received the Hobday Trophy, as the player scoring the highest number of runs during the season, for the third successive year.

Bowlers were also honored during the affair, at which Ron Jeffels was the guest speaker. Nick Walton of Castaways received the Castaways Trophy as the bowler taking the most wickets and Cowichan's David Auld was the winner of a new award — the Bob Walton Cup — as the man with the best average over the season.

Other presentations for individual accomplishments in competition during the summer went to Mike Dodd (most catches), Dave Thompson and Alan Carter (hat tricks) and Tim Bale and Peter Clarke (centuries).

COVETED AWARD

The association's most coveted award was presented posthumously to J. A. "Bun" Hobday, long an outstanding figure in Island cricket circles.

Hobday was named winner of the Gillespie Trophy, which goes annually to the cricketer contributing most to the game. Accepting the trophy was Malcolm Hodgins.

Castaways received the Knockout Cup as winners of the annual knockout tournament and Cowichan collected the Colonist Cup as the league champion.

Alberta Squads Stage Invasion

Three University of Alberta teams will arrive in Victoria on Friday for Western Canada Intercollegiate Athletic Association battles with the University of Victoria.

And a junior men's varsity squad from Centralia, Wash., will add to the invasion forces and will play a pair of exhibition games against UVic Jayvees.

The basketball Vikings, who now possess a 2-1 record, will tackle the Alberta Golden Bears at 8:30 p.m. both Friday and Saturday in the UVic gymnasium.

Bears will be led by captain Bob Morris, whose five-foot-eleven height seems to have handicapped him little in a game generally dominated by taller players.

Morris, 23, is in his fifth year with Bears after being selected as a guard for the second WCIAA all-star squad last season. He averaged 11.1 points per game in 1970-71.

Another of the leading Bears is 26-year-old Martin Lyons, who joined the Alberta squad this season after four years with St. Francis Xavior University. The six-four veteran forward was picked for the Atlantic Conference all-star squad for the last two seasons.

HOCKEY CONTESTS

Other visitors are the Alberta Pandas, who tackle UVic Vikettes in a pair of WCIAA women's basketball league games at 4:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday in the UVic gymnasium, and the Alberta Golden Bear hockey squad, which meets Vikings at 8 p.m. Friday and 1 p.m. Saturday in Esquimalt Sports Centre.

Centralia battles Jayvees at 6:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday in the UVic gym.

Meanwhile, some UVic athletes will be out of town for the weekend.

Cross-country runners will be bidding for honors in the Pacific Northwest championships Saturday in Vancouver, the volleyball Vikings will meet Thunderbirds at the University of British Columbia on Saturday and the rugby Jutes will tackle UBC in Vancouver the same day.

UBC GIRLS WIN AGAIN

VANCOUVER — University of British Coumbia Thunderettes continued their unbeaten march in the Inter-City Senior Women's Basketball League Wednesday by trimming the winless Vancouver Eldorados 54-40.

It was the seventh straight triumpf for the league-leading UBC girls, who were paced by Bev Barnes (11 points) and Wendy Grant (10).

Victoria Maplettes are in second place in the four-team league.

Spartans Pad Streak

Claremont Spartans extended their victory streak in the Victoria High School Rugby League to five matches Wednesday but failed to break a first-place deadlock with Oak Bay.

While Spartans, who have a game in hand, were blanking Victoria Titans 18-0 at Claremont, Bays trounced visiting Esquimalt 32-3 to chalk up their fifth consecutive win.

In the other match played Wednesday, Mt. Douglas Mountainmen scored a 6-0 victory over visiting Reynolds.

Claremont, winners of the Vancouver Island title with a 15-9 triumph over Shawnigan Lake on Tuesday, collected a third straight shutout in league play. Claremont led 6-0 at half-time on a try by Russ Chambers and a convert by Earl Sandwith. Rod McDonald, Gordie Mazzei and Ben Elwell completed Claremont scoring with second-half trys.

Bays, who have only lost to Spartans this season, exploded in the first half to rack up a 25-3 lead. Mark Brittain paced the offensive with two trys while Don Carson, Dave Kilshaw, Fred Manson and Chris Daniel, who also kicked a penalty goal, added single trys. Another penalty goal was booted by Joe Whipple and Jim Tarbuck added a convert to complete the Oak Bay scoring.

Bob McLean averted a shutout for Esquimalt with a penalty goal.

Neil Campbell scored two trys and Gerry Sommers added a single try for Mountainmen, all in the final quarter.

Hike in Juniors' Fees Nears Realistic Level

Cedar Hill's junior golfers, and some of the parents who foot their bills, are rather upset by Saanich municipality's decision to double the teen-agers' membership dues.

On Jan. 1, the price jumps from $25 to $50 — which makes it the highest junior assessment by any Greater Victoria course. For other comparisons, the existing fee is $18 at Gorge Vale, $20 at Royal Colwood, $25 at Uplands and $35 at Victoria Club.

Uplands is proposing an increase to $40 and there is talk (but nothing on the official agenda) of Colwood doing the same at their annual general meeting.

The other courses, because of their private or semi-private nature, are considered a rank ahead of Cedar Hill. The objectors consider only the degree of exclusiveness when they ask "what right has Cedar Hill got to charge the highest fee?"

The answer is: An obligation, to non-golfing taxpayers, to be realistic.

The Cedar Hill course management committee, headed by Ald. Bill Noel, was very aware of the rates being charged by other clubs in the neighborhood. But they also had a look at municipal-owned courses in Vancouver ($78) and in Burnaby ($60), and decided to go ahead with the big jump.

You can't rap the municipality for being realistic.

Uplands and, possibly, Colwood intend to be realistic, too. As much as I favor junior development, Gorge Vale's figure is too reasonable when you consider the facilities are available for at least 10 months out of the year.

(I know of one struggling golf writer who forked out $40 and change for a 12-year-old's figure skating habits in October. The November bill comes next, and the old man would be very happy if the 12-year-old decided to take up golf at Cedar Hill).

Unfortunately, the increase is directed at a group of youngsters who, over all, display greatest interest in golf. They play at Cedar Hill because they like the game, and not because their mommies and daddies belong, and it was easy for them to join.

If anything, the course management committee is guilty of poor public relations. Increasing the junior dues will NOT make Saanich a rich republic. The youngsters would not have objected if the increase had been spread over the next two or three years.

Foggy Plans, McGill Shift

CHATTER ON GREY CUP SCENE

VANCOUVER — Calgary Stampeders and Toronto Argonauts clash here Sunday in the national pro football final for the Grey Cup, but Montreal Alouettes are stealing much of the attention in the pre-game ballyhoo that includes talk of plans to deal with any fog that might threaten the classic.

Football people are chattering about the Montreal situation after a newspaper story reported that the Alouettes are laying the groundwork for a return next season to McGill Stadium.

The story claims that Alouette general manager Red O'Quinn has been assured of suitable playing dates at McGill and will be able to terminate the lease at the Autostade, the Als' home stadium since 1968.

Alouettes left McGill Stadium after 1967, blaming lack of suitable seating facilities for poor attendance. But crowds at the Autostade were no better until the team began to win last season.

★ ★ ★

The Stampeders, who got an enthusiastic sendoff from about 200 fans in Calgary, arrived in Vancouver virtually unnoticed. Only a handful of people met the Calgary team.

★ ★ ★

Canadian Football League officials are ready to deal with any fog which might threaten Sunday's game.

A Douglas DC3 aircraft will stand by to seed any fog blanket with a nitrogen-based fertilizer which absorbs moisture in the air. An airlines spokesman said the seeding would not remove the fog entirely, but would be able to improve visibility significantly.

The weather office, meanwhile, said chances of fog during the game, which starts at 1:30 PST, are "pretty slim."

★ ★ ★

Toronto defeated the Stamps 18-7 in their only league meeting this season, but Calgary played the game without first-string quarterback Jerry Keeling, who suffered a shoulder separation in a previous game.

★ ★ ★

Mayor Ken Fogarty of Ottawa says the nation's capital wants to put in a bid for the 1973 Grey Cup game.

Ottawa is to submit its bid at a CFL meeting Friday with a promise of installing artificial turf and a guarantee of increasing seating facilities to handle a crowd of 33,000-plus in time for the 1973 game.

★ ★ ★

The Empire Stadium confrontation is expected to be the richest in Grey Cup history, and the spending by fans is expected to pump an estimated $3.25 million into Vancouver's economy.

About 15,000 visitors are expected, with each expected to spend about $150. Hotel and motel accommodation in the Greater Vancouver area is booked solid, and there are reports that some of the overflow is being channelled to Victoria and Seattle.

Cancer Top Killer In China—Doctor

MONTREAL (CP) — Cancer is the No. 1 killer in the People's Republic of China and heart disease, especially arteriosclerosis, hardening of the arteries, ranks second, a doctor from Peking said Wednesday.

Dr. Ha Hsien-wen, a surgeon in charge of a tumor hospital in Peking, has been visiting Montreal doctors, students and scientists in the last three days and telling them about "medical health work in the new China."

Dr. Ha, who was accompanied by Dr. Chen Wen-chieh, director of Blood Research at the University of Peking, said in an interview he was particularly impressed with cancer research in Canada.

China, although it manufactures 80 per cent of its own drugs, imports cobalt, used in radiotherapy for cancer, from Canada, Dr. Ha said.

He also said he admired the sophisticated electronic equipment used in intensive care units of hospitals here, adding there is a shortage of such equipment and of computers in Chinese medical centres.

Dr. Chen said there are medical schools in each of China's 18 provinces and "we estimate there has been an eight-fold increase in the number of doctors" since 1949 when Mao Tse-tung's forces took over the country.

Medical students spend three years in college after high school, working from 6 a.m. to 9 p.m., six days a week and are paid a salary by the state. They work for one month a year on a rural commune.

All doctors are taught the ancient Chinese art of needle healing called acupuncture. Long thin needles are inserted and skillfully twirled at certain points in the body.

This treatment, the doctors said, is painless and is used to treat and cure many ailments such as arthritis, rheumatism, and paralysis due to strokes.

"We can't explain how it works, but we know it works," Dr. Chen said.

Chinese doctors are keeping up with the latest advances in Western science and read Western medical journals, Dr. Ha said.

DO OPEN-HEART WORK

They have performed open heart surgery, replaced diseased arteries with artificial ones made of teflon and made major advances in microvascular surgery—joining very tiny blood vessels and have reconnected more than 100 severed fingers and arms since 1963.

While a few kidney transplant operations have been tried, "we feel we have much to learn from Canadians in the area of transplant operations," Dr. Ha said.

Shoreline For Industry

Sidney Council has declared the shoreline north and south of Beacon Avenue a development area in a move to encourage marine industry growth.

Referring to repeated efforts by Sidney and North Saanich Chamber of Commerce to obtain federal government support for a breakwater Mayor Stan Dear commented: "We will need a million dollars worth of marine development before we see a breakwater here."

Council gave third reading to the development bylaw Monday which governs land and shoreline between Mount Baker Street and Oakville Avenue.

There are at present no applications for use of this land.

HUMORIST QUITS . . . ON THE AIR

TORONTO (CP) — Humorist Henry Morgan resigned from Peter Gzowski's radio show Wednesday on the air after criticizing its producer, Bill Casselman, for 10 minutes.

The CBC cut his attack from the Toronto and Western Canada relays of the show but it went live to the Maritimes.

Mr. Morgan said he was angry because Mr. Casselman had asked him to do some preparation on his 10-minute stints, giving them a beginning, a middle and an end.

Mr. Morgan, a well-known American radio and television personality, recently moved to Toronto from New York.

Mr. Morgan said Mr. Casselman had accused him of "a rip-off" in doing the show extemporaneously.

"That word is street children's language for stealing. I've been talking on the air since I was 17—that'll be 40 years in March—and this is the first time in 40 years that I've been told I was stealing.

"Nobody can talk to me that way. Nobody. So goodbye Peter, I'm sorry, cause I like you.

Mr. Casselman's boss Alex Frame said it is a producer's function to give directions to on-air talent and that Mr. Morgan will not be back on the show "because of that display . . . of unprofessional conduct."

Cop Aids Ex-Con

PAYETTE, Idaho (AP) — Chuck Wells, a former dope addict and ex-convict, is getting a new start in life—all because of a small-town cop.

Police Chief Stan Sower, 39, opened the prison door for the 25-year-old Wells, got him a job and set him up in an apartment in this small southwestern Idaho community.

Three years ago Sower arrested Wells for burglarizing a doctor's office.

"He's a good kid," Sower said of Wells, "he wasn't even armed when he broke into the medical clinic. He went right by two safes. He just needed a fix."

While in prison Wells kicked the drug habit.

Last September, Wells received a parole date. The only condition was that he have a job and a place to live. He was ready to head for his Tacoma, Wash., home.

But early this month a prison counsellor told Wells he had talked with his parents and that they didn't want him to come home.

That's when Chief Sower stepped in. He arranged for a job at a food processing plant and paid the first month's rent on an apartment for Wells.

"I have only one aim and that's to not let him down," Wells said. "If there were more policemen like Stan Sower, the prisons wouldn't be as crowded."

Socreds Probe Alberta Loss

CALGARY (CP) — The leader of the party that governed Alberta for 36 years thinks he lost the last provincial election partly because Social Credit didn't sell itself the way some companies push soap.

The rest of the party didn't entirey endorse Harry Strom's reasons for the Aug. 30 defeat, but delegates to Social Credit's 37th annual meeting were generally unanimous on the one view:

The defeat by the Progressive Conservatives resulted partly from a failure to communicate.

Strom said Social Credit was out-hustled "partly because we have been slow to adapt to the new kind of electioneering . . . the repetitious soap-selling kind of image."

The stern-faced, 58-year-old former farmer isn't enthusiastic about the modern style of campaigning, but the Conservatives proved it works.

The entire Conservative campaign was centred on the image of leader Peter Lougheed, a handsome, 43-year-old Calgary lawyer, and it gave them 49 of the 75 seats in the legislature. Social Credit salvaged 25 seats and the New Democratic Party took one.

BASIC PRODUCT GOOD

The problem is not the product but the packaging, said Bill Johnson, president of the Alberta Social Credit League.

"We've got to get rid of the 1935 Model-T and into a 1971 Duster.

"It's a question of sales. We've got to get young people interested. . . . They are coming but it's a long process . . . a matter of communication."

Strom said Social Credit has to redefine its position in Alberta politics, take another look at principles and then face the leadership question.

But the convention opted for compromises on delicate questions and little debate took place on new policy directions.

Compensation Talks Making Progress

REGINA (CP) — Premier Allen Blakeney said Wednesday he believes some progress is being made in negotiations with Parsons and Whittmore of New York concerning compensation for the ill-fated pulp mill in North-Central Saskatchewan.

The NDP government cancelled the $177 million project negotiated by the former Liberal administration, when it took power. The government said it was a bad financial deal.

Blakeney, who met with Parsons president Karl Landegger this week said negotiations are continuing on compensation for work already done on the site but he wouldn't speculate on whether the matter could be settled out of court.

It is not known how much Parsons is asking for or how much the province is prepared to pay.

Cries in His Beer

WINNIPEG (CP) — British Columbia brewer Ben Ginter says his recently opened Tartan Brewery plant in Winnipeg "is in serious trouble" because hotels in Manitoba won't sell his beer.

In a statement released Wednesday Ginter said hotels and hotel vendors, which sell 80 per cent of the beer in Manitoba, were not giving the public a chance to buy his beer. He said the Liquor Control Commission should stop the hidden monopoly of other breweries.

Quality Drops

EDMONTON (CP) — The quality of water in the North Saskatchewan River deteriorated slightly last winter because of low water levels, the Alberta environment reported Wednesday.

A survey from October 1970 to March 1971 showed bacteria counts in the river just east of Edmonton exceeded guidelines, said the report. The department was unable to give a reason for the low water levels but said levels are a factor because increased river flow dilutes pollutants.

Cost Curbs Needed

SASKATOON (CP) — National and provincial health associations must initiate plans and action for control of health costs, Judge E. N. Hughes, president of the Saskatchewan Hospital Association, said Wednesday.

Irish Stew, Music Part of Scene At Manitoba's Government House

Victoria Times
THURSDAY, NOV. 25, 1971. 21
SECOND SECTION

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

Pomp and circumstance take second place at Winnipeg's Government House.

It's primarily a place where informality allows working girls to feel at home and husky football players can rejuvenate themselves on Irish stew.

At 43, Lt.-Gov. William John (Jack) McKeag of Manitoba is the youngest lieutenant-governor in Canada.

McKeag is president of the real estate firm of McKeag-Harris Realty and Development Company and a director of Security Storage Co. Ltd.

His age, he feels, is one of his most important assets.

★

In Victoria to visit Mr. and Mrs. Eric Dowell of Upper Terrace before attending the Grey Cup game in Vancouver, he and his wife, Dawn, tell why.

"We have an advantage, because of our age, in the business of bridging the generation gap. We're trying to broaden the contact of Government House because it's a place where people of different politics, religions and ethnic groups can meet at ease."

They tell some of the ways in which they do this.

Government House in Winnipeg is downtown, on the grounds of the Legislative Buildings, and surrounded by apartment houses.

It was the people in those apartments that the McKeags invited to their neighborhood party (actually two parties, each with 200 guests) four months after they moved into the vice-regal mansion.

Mrs. McKeag explains, "We've always invited the neighbors in every time we moved."

McKeag chuckles when he recalls, "One of my business friends phoned up and asked was it true that his secretary needed time off because she'd been invited to sip cocktails at Government House. I told him if she lived close by it was."

After the first party, the local television studio interviewed some of the McKeags' neighbors.

★

One young man said he'd lived opposite Government House for 15 years and often felt like going over to borrow a cup of sugar.

He added that now he thought he'd probably get that cup of sugar!

The McKeags have been ardent football fans for years and one of the parties they gave was for the Winnipeg Blue Bombers and their wives.

McKeag says, "They'd had a disastrous season and we wanted to do something to cheer them up."

The Bombers' party had an Irish theme, Irish stew, corned beef and cabbage — and Irish coffee. There was also a lively English 'pub' band that soon had the Bombers and their wives tapping their toes.

Mrs. McKeag recalls, "They wanted to dance. You should have seen those, great, big enormous guys clear away the tables in no time!"

The McKeags have four children. Like their parents, they have adapted to Government House living with ease, handling the formal moments with aplomb and adding their own touch of humanity.

During the summer months the Government House area of Winnipeg becomes a gathering spot for hippies, who also appear to feel the vice-regal residence is part of the pattern of living.

Mrs. McKeag gives an example:

"We came home from a church parade one Sunday and found a hippie sleeping on the front lawn. Our children were playing baseball. They said they didn't mind where he slept — except he was on second base!"

★

In spite of their informality, the McKeags are conscious of the fact that Government House is more than a meeting place for the people.

Mrs. McKeag is the daughter of Douglas Campbell, a former premier of the province.

"I remember my father saying, when he visited us after we moved in, that he had spent many an evening in the library talking over sticky problems."

Her husband says of his office, "It is a position of trust that is a safeguard for all people."

Isherwood Shocked By 'Secret' Club

The administration of Victoria's civic affairs by "more or less a secret or invited club" of aldermen in committee was attacked Wednesday by one of four candidates for mayor in the December municipal elections.

Foster Isherwood, retiring Saanich alderman and Victoria mayoral hopeful, told Optimist Club members he is "shocked" by the city administration's process of making decisons in committee, totally removed from public participation, and the rubber-stamping of those committee decisions in open council sessions.

"I think that procedure should be changed."

Isherwood said if elected mayor of Victoria, he will attempt to manage the city's affairs openly, by offering "guidance" to civic administrators and council.

He said city politics in recent years has become riddled with bitterness and the administration of present mayor Courtney Haddock, seeking re-election, "has been floundering for two years."

"Those in his administration have not assisted him," Isherwood said. He suggested "there is an honest position for a new candidate (in the mayoral race) with a fresh outlook," to help circumvent the present bitterness at city hall.

Isherwood said the present mayor "had no experience (in municipal politics) . . . and that's why we're in the trouble we're in."

PRO-AMALGAMATION

The city lawyer, an Oak Bay resident who has served on Saanich council for the past four years, reiterated his pro-amalgamation stand and voiced strong opposition to the present trend toward regional government.

"I believe in amalgamation as something we should work toward."

The regional government creates "another level of government on top of all these other levels," making for unnecessary duplication of such services as planning and ultimately costing the taxpayer additional money.

Additionally, he said, regional government effectively removes the taxpayer from the decision-making process because in organized areas, representatives to the regional board are appointed from the municipal councils, not elected by the ratepayers.

Other points his platform stressed include:

● Preservation of those desirable things about Victoria which make it unique, such as historic buildings and sites.

● Establishment of a convention centre, financed and administered by the business sector rather than the city.

● Rigid control of waterfront development to exclude high-rise construction and ensure maximum benefit to the citizens from waterfront access.

Drug Use On Job A Problem

The Workmen's Compensation Board of B.C. is concerned about drug and alcohol abuse on the job, a seminar in the Empress Hotel was told today.

"This is far greater than any of us would normally imagine," Hector Wright, a WCB commissioner, told more than 100 labor and management delegates to the one-day seminar.

He said the problem will receive detailed attention at a conference in Vancouver Jan. 28-29, organized by the WCB in conjunction with the Alcoholism Foundation and the Narcotic Addiction Foundation.

In his speech, Wright said there is a "new look" by the WCB in terms of improved services and informing the public of what it does.

In the past, radio hotlines were full of criticism, he said. Now, he said, there is a better way of complaining — the WCB's claims advisory service.

This service will give the reasons for disputed claims, he said. Several other provincial compensation boards had copied this feature.

Lottery Proposed To Fund Health Plan

Government-operated sweepstakes to provide money for health services were proposed today by the Union of British Columbia municipalities.

In a brief presented to the provincial cabinet, the group said no new source of revenue should be overlooked" and pointed out that sweepstakes take a great amount of money out of B.C.

The money from provincial sweepstakes should be used to provide health services not now offered by the government, the brief said.

But after meeting with the cabinet, Ernie Broome, Vancouver alderman and president of UBCM, said the proposal was "quite a lightweight resolution" which was included in the brief because some of the UBCM members wanted it there.

The cabinet reaction to the idea was that "sweepstakes are not quite the right way to raise money," Broome said. The Irish Hospitals Sweepstakes don't raise much money for Irish hospitals, the UBCM delegation was told by the cabinet.

In another recommendation, the UBCM suggested the extension of $1 a day hospital insurance to private hospitals and intermediate care institutions as one of the additional services needed in the health field. The brief also noted that the province's 10,500 mobile homeowners pay annual fees for municipal services ranging from $36 to $96, while "local taxes on a typical NHA-finance single detached three-bedroom bungalow average $360 a year. . . ."

★ ★ ★

While mobile homes originally were what their name implied, houses on wheels, "almost all of them are now classified as motionless and are built without wheels and designed to be placed on a permanent foundation. . . ."

On pollution, the brief said the UBCM knew of "no way in which air pollution can be effectively controlled other than by action on at least a regional basis."

A single authority empowered to co-ordinate land use in watersheds in the province should be established. It would also control effluent discharges into the water system, and the necessary treatment facilities.

"We believe it is essential that one agency be formed and given overall power to regulate, plan and control the attack on pollution through regional authorities."

In other recommendations, resulting from resolutions passed earlier at the UBCM convention, the government was asked to ease tax requirements for farmland.

Government sweepstakes were proposed a year ago by the Social Credit Party's annual convention and were rejected by the government shortly after.

★ ★ ★

The UBCM brief referred to sweepstakes held in Manitoba and Quebec as well as Great Britain and Ireland, all helping to take money out of B.C. which "could be better invested here."

The UBCM offered two possible solutions to "the plight of many senior citizens caught between the upward and increasing property taxes spiral of higher living costs and their own fixed and often limited means. . . ."

It said that tax relief for senior citizens "must be found" either through deferred property tax payments, though it is not generally favored, or a substantial increase in the provincial home owner's grant "on the basis of bona fide need."

Court Action Out In Hospital Case

The attorney-general's department has apparently decided to take no action in the wake of a picket line demonstration last month at Sandringham Private Hospital.

Attorney-General Leslie Peterson declined comment and his department referred questions to Sandringham's lawyer, Louis Lindholm.

Today, Lindholm said the attorney-general's department has "indicated it is unlikely" that it will institute criminal contempt of court action because the demonstration lasted only a few minutes and there were "no untoward" incidents or damage.

The private hospital, where employees have been on strike for 14 months, has asked the attorney-general's department to initiate criminal contempt of court proceedings against the B.C. Government Employees Union and the Canadian Union of Public Employees.

Just over 150 delegates to the B.C. Government Employees Union Convention last month demonstrated their support for the strikers, members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, by joining the picket line for just over five minutes.

A court order last summer, following two mass demonstrations outside the hospital, limited the number of pickets to five.

Three Children in Poor Condition

Three children remained in poor condition in hospital today following a three-car accident on the Patricia Bay highway Wednesday in which a Saanich woman died.

Two other children injured in the crash were reported in fair and good condition respectively.

The accident occurred at the intersection of Sayward and the highway, and involved the chauffeur-driven car of the RCMP head in B.C., Assistant Commissioner Gordon Cunningham.

Saanich police said Mrs. Gail Wickens, 30, of 420 Brookleigh, Saanich, was killed in the crash. Two of the five children in the car she was driving were her own, and four of them were being taken to Elk Lake elementary school.

Her vehicle, eastbound on Sayward, was in collision with a car being driven south on the highway by Carl Turner, 56, of 10018 Siddall, Sidney, the lone occupant.

Police said Mrs. Wickens' car was pushed into the side of a car stopped at a red light, and carrying the RCMP head to Victoria International Airport.

Cunningham, driven by civilian chauffeur Albert Harbottle, 2631 Cedar Hill, was on his way to pay his respects to Governor-General Roland Michener and his wife, as they left for Ottawa after a six-day visit to B.C.

Neither Cunningham nor his driver was hurt, an RCMP spokesman said. The Micheners were still at Government House at the time of the crash, and by the time they reached the scene the vehicles had been cleared away.

Reported in poor condition in St. Joseph's Hospital today were the two Wickens children, Steven, 7, and Melissa, 3; and Denise Demeule, 5, daughter of Roger Demeule, 5443 Hamsterley. They have head and other injuries.

Also at St. Joseph's is Catherine Pope, 5, daughter of G. R. Pope, 421 Brookleigh. She was reported in fair condition with a mild concussion and mutiple cuts.

Greater Victoria Coroner Edmond St. Jorre said he has ordered a post mortem today and will probably open the inquest next Monday.

Mrs. Wickens was the wife of Wayne Wickens, employed in the provincial agriculture department as B.C. superintendent of 4-H clubs.

Oak Bay Loan Approved

Oak Bay today received approval of its application for $266,090 under the federal-provincial loan program to provide winter work.

Mayor Frances Elford said the grant will allow the municipality to employ an extra 50 men, 18 at Carnarvon Park and 32 at Henderson Park.

A sum of $214,390 will be spent on improvements at Henderson Park, the major portion on a large winter activity gymnasium and the rest on construction of three tennis courts.

At Carnarvon Park, $51,700 will be used to build winter activity rooms and enlarge the lacrosse box to bring it up to regulation standards.

Architect John Di Castri is completing plans for the large Henderson Park building. The mayor hopes the work on this project will go to tender within two weeks.

Low Income Group to Back Sooke Man's Welfare Appeal

The Victoria Low Income Group said today it will back an appeal by a 25-year-old Sooke man affected this month by the provincial government's welfare-cutting program.

A spokesman said the man is Dave Morrow, who was removed from the welfare rolls allegedly because he lives too far away from the city and is not available for job opportunities.

Welfare officials confirmed Tuesday there is a recent attempt to apply stricter interpretation of the department's requirement that welfare recipients be willing and available to work.

Morrow lives on the Sooke Road near the 16 Mile House and has a telephone in service.

An appeal will take place Monday, the Low Income Group spokesman said.

The reason given by the welfare department was that the $90 rent paid by Morrow for his house is too high.

Overdue Letter to an American Friend

ONE OF THESE YEARS, I may get around to returning the filleting knife you loaned me. You caught two salmon that trip on coho bucktails I tied for you. The boat was yours, trailered north from California. But your outboard was running rough, so we used mine.

As men who have known each other for a long time, we take these casual exchanges no less for granted than the fact of friendship.

You are stubbornly American, I am no less determinedly Canadian. Even if the faded One-World dream of Adlai Stevenson's should by some miracle achieve reality in our lifetimes, we would remain what we are — men of two nations, with ingrained loyalties, and differences that go more than skin-deep.

I do not approve all that your country does and has done. When we next meet, I expect you will ask me what the hell Canada thinks she's up to, and that we will argue as we have done numerous times before.

With vigor, as one of your presidents whose death I mourned used to say. Even fiercely.

Yet while we do so, it is probable that you will be accepting another Canadian rye in my house, or pouring bourbon-on-the-rocks in yours.

I find it unthinkable that we should ever be less than friends. For if we have our differences and our areas of disagreement, we also have more in common than bullheadedness and a tendency to form hasty opinions.

There is the bond that exists between men who would sooner fish than eat.

There is the fact of long acquaintance. Because of it, we can trace back.

When you and your wife were newly married, my wife and I were your first guests. You two were domiciled for that week in a tent in an American campground. We sat in a row on an air mattress, and your bride, assuming that we as Canadians must be avid tea-drinkers, worried because she had only coffee to serve.

Your Western-American accents amused us. Until you convinced us of the fact, we were unaware that such a thing as a Canadian accent existed.

That was a long time ago — long enough for your son, who learned the way of a trout with a fly from me, to have grown into a useful man. And although you and I have never agreed about the Vietnam war, I shared your relief when he came safe home from that encounter.

Neither of us is given to apologizing for the decisions and actions of his country. By the same token, neither of us knows as much as he should about the other's country. But we have learned a good deal from each other, and we can lay claim to a limited understanding.

Even though you taxed me with exhibiting a split personality when we talked about American investment in Canada, I think you understand that very many Canadians who accept the need for outside investment also realize the dangers of economic domination.

On my part, I'm unlikely to make the mistake of casting wholesale blame on the United States for Canada's economic troubles. It would be foolish of me to do so, knowing that massive layoff and cutback have been a threat to your personal economy for the last two years.

Not that we spend overmuch time in discussions of that sort. When we next meet, as I trust we will late next summer when the coho are putting on weight, we will have other matters in mind.

What I have to say before winding up this letter isn't really necessary. But because of the temper of our times, I feel it should be said.

Knowing you, I cannot be anything but cold toward anti-Americanism and those who profess it. To be otherwise would be a betrayal of friendship.

WENDY DEY – EDITOR

Women 'Wasted' In Labor Force

MONTREAL (CP) — Women constitute a third of Canada's labor force but are still underpaid and under employed, says Sylva Gelber, director of the federal labor department women's bureau.

"This is not only wasteful of human resources but also detrimental to the Canadian economy," she told a meeting of the Pioneer Women of Canada this week.

"The present pattern of the female labor force in Canada might well be used as the bench mark against which may be measured Canada's forward march in attaining equal opportunity for women."

Canada has nearly three-quarters of a million working mothers with more than 1.3 million children under age 14. There are also about one-third of a million women, mostly widows, who are the sole support of families and another 925,000 single working women.

Miss Gelber says it is fair to assume that the majority of women, especially married women with young children who doubled their burden by working outside the home, are employed because of economic need.

Women comprised more than 32 per cent of the labor force but fewer than four per cent hold managerial jobs, a figure that had hardly changed in recent years in spite of increasing numbers of working women. Most held jobs as clerical workers or in the lower ranks of service industries.

Breakthroughs in male-dominated professions such as law and medicine were being made in countries such as Britain and France but Canada lagged behind. And in all sectors, professional and academic as well as industrial, women generally drew lower pay than men doing the same work in spite of legislation forbidding such practices.

"Why should a spinner in the synthetic textile trade who is a woman receive an hourly wage rate which is 41.6 per cent less than that of the male worker doing the same job?"

Miss Lesley Normandin with adopted daughter, Sydney Paget, 6

Single Executive Adopts Girl, 6

MONTREAL (CP) — Lesley Normandin is single, an advertising manager of a large downtown clothes store and has adopted six-year-old Sydney Paget.

Miss Normandin is one of a few women in Montreal who have taken advantage of Quebec adoption laws which allow single persons to adopt children as long as they are of the same sex.

Grace Galley, formerly with the Children's Service Centre and now with the Jewish Child Welfare Bureau of the Baron de Hirsch Institute, says that to her knowledge "no single man has adopted a child, although one did make inquiries, and there are probably less than a dozen women."

Most of these placements were made by Miss Galley when she was at the Children's Service Centre.

"We believe that every child has a right to a family of his own," Miss Galley said.

"Preferably that family should have both mother and father, but if such a complete family is not available, then for the child a single-parent family is much better than none."

Hard to Place

In practice, the children adopted by single women are those generally hard to place because they are not young enough, physically handicapped in some way and usually of mixed racial background. Many come from other provinces where there is less acceptance of mixed-race children than in Quebec and where there is less demand for children.

Paget, as she likes to be called, entered Grade 1 this fall. She was four when she arrived in her new home. Her mop of curly blonde hair and bright blue-green eyes belie her mixed racial background. Her mother was white and her father partly black.

Reading about the need to find homes for children of mixed race gave Miss Normandin the idea that she could adopt one.

"I make good money and could afford it," she said. "I thought: 'Why not support a child?' " She had friends who had adopted successfully and was aware that single parents in Quebec were allowed to adopt children.

Took Two Years

It took two years for her application to come through. She had asked for an older child but, at the time, the law releasing older children for adoption, who had been more or less in foster-home care, had not been passed in Quebec.

Two years ago she was told there was a child in Nova Scotia "who might be suitable." As Miss Normandin was going to New Brunswick to visit a friend, she extended her trip to Nova Scotia.

A few days later, mother and daughter returned to Montreal together.

The main difference between a single woman who adopts a child and one who is forced into the role of single parent by circumstances is one of free choice.

Adoption authorities say these women, generally well into their 30s and even early 40s, have freely chosen to adopt a child for the only reason that they want one. They are usually successful in their chosen fields and able to cope with the financial load a child involves.

Study Shows Prejudice in School Texts

TORONTO (CP) — Five months ago two educationists reported that Ontario school children were getting prejudiced views of national, religious and minority groups from textbooks. But with the 1971 term well under way, the books still are in the classrooms.

But that's all right with Dr. Garnet McDiarmid, one of the authors of the report entitled Teaching Prejudice. He says he would like to see teachers and students using the report to discover where prejudice lies in the textbooks.

The study, a survey of 143 textbooks used in Ontario, was commissioned by the Ontario Human Rights Commission. It was carried out by Dr. McDiarmid of the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education and Dr. David Pratt of the faculty of education at Queen's University at Kingston.

It found that bias in the textbooks occurred through both commission and omission.

For instance, the extinction of the Beothuk Indians of Newfoundland was mentioned in only two of 27 Grade 7 and 8 history texts examined. The authors concluded it might reasonably be expected to have been mentioned.

Another thing the authors found was that Indians and Negroes, for example, were more apt to be described in neutral or negative terms while Christians and Jews were usually described in positive or no worse than neutral terms.

Their survey contained one passage:

"To take the term more frequently applied to each group, we are most likely to encounter in textbooks, devoted Christians, great Jews, hard-working immigrants, infidel Moslems, primitive Negroes and savage Indians."

Shortly after the report came down, Education Minister Robert Welch indicated nothing dramatic would happen. He said revision of texts would be done in an "evolutionary, rather than a dramatic way."

Since then officials of the provincial department of education have met most of the publishers to point out passages that might be considered biased against ethnic or minority groups.

However, these meetings were the result of a departmental review of textbooks initiated 18 months before the McDiarmid-Pratt report was released.

Revisions are expected to come about as books come up for reprinting. "I don't advocate book burning. Just getting rid of the books doesn't mean you eliminate discrimination," Dr. McDiarmid said in an interview.

"I think it would be very positive if teachers had Teaching Prejudice on hand and would say to the kids, 'Let's see what this says about our textbooks and then let's see if it exists in the textbooks in front of us.' "

But there is one hitch. Classroom use of Teaching Prejudice is impossible for teachers because it has not been reviewed by the department of education and hence is not on the approved list. Under provincial statute, a book not on the list can't be used in the classroom.

Former Nun on Trial

ROME (AP) — A 58-year-old former Roman Catholic nun, standing trial for cruelty and torture of children in her orphanage, told a Rome court Tuesday she was "a saint, a heroine, not a monster."

Four children are alleged to have died as a result of maltreatment in the orphanage.

As she completed her testimony in tears, Maria Diletta Pagliuca said her orphanage "was like a royal palace, with beautiful beds, heating under the floor, and plenty of toys."

The former nun was arrested in June, 1969, after police inspected the Santa Rita Institute at Grottaferrata, south of Rome. The institute, for orphans, handicapped children and babies given up by poor families, was Miss Pagliuca's personal property.

Police said they found in the institute children chained to their beds, covered with bruises and undernourished.

Police said the children were in such poor conditions they could hardly understand who they were and what was happening.

They said the institute was extremely filthy and a stench was still present two days after it had been opened and disinfected.

Miss Pagliuca, who left a nun's order 15 years ago, said the charges were all false. She said it was a "plot by police" against her, prompted by other organizations who were jealous of her success.

Miss Canada Donna Sawicky, 18

'I'm Not in a Meat Market'

By HELEN MELNYK
Times Staff

Call Miss Canada a beauty? Wash your mouth out with soap!

Feminists may not have succeeded in putting an end to the annual pageant, but their charges that the event is a "meat market" have stung some sensitive spots.

Champagne corks were a-popping at the press reception for the newly crowned Miss Canada, 18-year-old Donna Sawicky in the Empress Hotel Wednesday afternoon. Four representatives from one of the companies sponsoring the event, and a pageant official were on hand to greet the guests.

"Where is she?" bellowed a photographer as he walked in. "I was told if I came down here, I'd get a date with Miss Canada. Har. Har. Har."

"We don't call it a beauty contest", said Judi Muir, public relations director for the Miss Canada Pageant. "Contestants are judged on the basis of their poise, carriage, talent and figure."

She brought up the subject of the swimsuit competition.

"The girls are no longer lined up or asked to do a quarter turn like 10 years ago. It's more of a dignified presentation now. The girls come on in groups and are kept moving."

Women's lib picketed outside the television studio in Toronto where the pageant was held, Mrs. Muir said. They also sent a letter to each contestant. Apparently their protestations discouraged none of the girls, however.

Sponsors Present

The tours of Miss Canada are not heavy on commercialism, she said.

The four sponsors were mingling with the guests exchanging pleasantries and making sure that everything was proceeding smoothly. No samples of their products were in evidence. On a table near the entrance was a pile of white envelopes containing "press releases". Printed on company inscribed stationery, the releases told about Miss Canada and the "exciting" products that she uses to keep herself that unmentionable word beautiful.

"The company was one of the major TV sponsors of the pageant," said Mrs. Muir. "It was the first sponsor elected to show Miss Canada to the public." When their contract expires in December, the other sponsors take their turns in doing the honors.

"Rather than having Miss Canada demonstrate the products — crass, you know — she is presented in interviews in stores and other places," said Mrs. Muir. "She might mention during the interview the name of the product. When for example someone asks how she keeps her hair so nice, she'll mention that such and such product helps her."

Just then the lady in question breezed in wearing one of her prizes, a chinchilla midi coat. All eyes in the room are centred on the new arrival.

"Hi, Big Jim!" she called to her photographer fan.

"I'm not totally against women's lib," said Miss Sawicky. "They've got their point about equal pay for equal work and so on. But I'm not in a meat market. I use my mind.

"The bathing suit part is a passover from former times," she said. "They carefully explained to us that we weren't being judged on our bathing suit appearance, but on carriage and pose. So I wasn't embarressed.

"It's not a beauty pageant. You show yourself as an individual.

"The emphasis is on talent," she added, "I'm not the most beautiful girl in Canada."

Her modesty notwithstanding, Miss Sawicky is a beautiful girl. It's a statistical fact: 34-24-34, 5 feet 5 inches, 110 pounds.

"Miss Canada represents the girl of today being herself," she said.

'Uh, Fine'

"What does she think of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women?

"Uh, fine . . . I've only read some articles about it. And I don't want to classify anything before I know about it."

The booty that the winner gets might shake the principles of even the staunchest feminist. The jackpot totals up to $55,000 worth of prizes which include the $1,200 scholarship, $6,000 in cash, 12 pieces of luggage, three cars, a grand piano. She is sent on eight cross-Canada and 12 international tours, as well as on a two-week vacation to any country of her choice. Travel expenses are all paid, first class.

Senior Citizens Rate Special Treatment

TORONTO (CP) — Across Canada, there are a great many services, large and small, available for people beyond the age of 65. They range from reduced movie prices to social clubs to foster home care and pension supplements.

People don't always know the services exist, or if they do know, don't know where to find them. They may be offered by the federal, provincial or municipal government, by a volunteer group, a local business or a professional organization.

And they don't all exist everywhere. Some areas are served better than others.

Locating services can be a matter of perseverance and of luck even for someone ho knows a ood deal about community agencies.

One place to start is with your community information centre, if your town has one. They are not all ealled information centres, so you may have to ask telephone information, the municipal office, social planning council or your newspaper if there is an information centre and how to reach it.

If there is not, any of those sources should be able to help you find services in your community.

Mary Dominico of the Toronto centre says they list small services as well as large because people ask about them.

Special Rates

For instance, most movie chains offer special rates to people 65 and over. Write or call your nearest theatre, and be prepared to offer proof of age.

Some theatres and concert halls have special rates at given performances.

She notes that every community has events to which admission is free, no matter what your age is.

Most public transportation systems have special fares or no fares for older people, at least during part of the day. Their offices can tell you how to apply.

Air Canada and CP Air have cut rate fares on a stand-by basis for destinations within Canada. You pay three dollars for an identification card. Some airlines now have special international fares.

An information centre can probably tell you about social clubs and centres, meals-on-wheels, whether there is a telephone chain or a friendly visiting service, as well as about government services.

The public health nurses can steer you to health services.

The public library should know if there is a mobile library service.

Professional associations may be able to tell you if special help is available for people who need things like foot care, dentures, eye glasses or hearing aids.

Recreation centres may be located through the municipality, the provincial recreation office, a home for the aged.

Churches, the Red Cross, the Ys, service clubs usually know where services are, often run some of them.

The telephone book listings under Government of Canada or provincial government listings are another source of information.

Government departments may have literature providing background information that sometimes tells people they are entitled to benefits they didn't know about.

Booklets Help

The department of national health and welfare has booklets on the Canada Pension plan, disability benefits, survivors' benefits, the guaranteed income supplement, retirement pensions and health and welfare services in Canada.

Provincial departments often have pamphlets describing services plus some of advice and information such as Ontario's consumer guide for senior citizens.

Department names change from province to province, such as social and family services, social development, health and welfare. The provincial information number can start you on your search. The Ontario Welfare Council section on aging has a guide to services for older people. It also recommends that information and services be offered through multi-purpose senior citizens centres.

It begins with old age security. You get application forms at the post office. Current payments are $80 a month. Guaranteed income supplement applications are mailed from regional old age security offices.

Canada Pension Plan survivor and disability benefit applications are made through regional CPP offices.

Most provinces have additional financial help available on a needs-test basis.

A War Veterans Allowance district authority can tell you if you are eligible under a means test to their allowance.

For emergency help, apply to your local welfare office or regional office of the provincial welfare department.

Many communities have low-rent housing projects for older people. They can be found through the local council,housing authority or procil, housing authority.

The local medical officer of health can provide a list of nursing homes.

Check Office

In some cases, elderly people whose incomes are low can have ll or part of their health insurance paid for. Check with your provincial health insurance office to be sure you have both health and hospital coverage that is most suitable for you.

A local board of health can tell you if an organized home care program is available in your community. It provides services to allow patients to leave a hospital early or to avoid entering it.

Mental health services can be located through the provincial department of health.

This Playground Really Swings

BERKELEY, Calif. (UPI) — Playgrounds have come a long way since the old days of just swings and bars, thanks to educated ideas in design.

At Thousand Oaks School in Berkeley, recess time ing new dimensions of play means small children explor- and learning in equipment devised by University of California students.

A landscape architecture class is transforming a conventional blacktop playground into a fantastic array of structures and spaces to challenge and delight the children. The UC students have also designed an outdoor nature study area.

The new central playground is essentially two complex wooden towers (one is called "The Tower of a Thousand Rooms") inside a circle of vertical posts. Two sloping cables with pulleys provide the fastest and most popular means of getting from one tower to the other.

Chairman Mao 'Trivialized'

LONDON (UPI) — Representatives of China refused an invitation to a display of "ping-pong" fashions because the garments included patterns with Chairman Mao The-tung's thoughts in Chinese, a show spokesman said Wednesday.

The slogans are part of knitted men's and women's outfits created by the design and development centre in Leicester and were shown at the Clothing Institute's designers convention at a hotel.

The words were copied by the designers from photographs of wall posters in Shanghai, the spokesman said. The slogans include "joy to the workers," "joy through work," and "united China for all time."

The centre's chief designer, John Carr Doughty, called the collection "ping-pong" fashions."

"We explained the designs but they were very upset," the spokesman said. "They said they thought it was trivialization of Chairman Mao's thoughts.

Report Too Late

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new government report says enzyme detergents do not pose a significant threat of skin or respiratory irritations to consumers if used as directed.

Ironically, the conclusions, published last week, come after enzyme wash products have generally faded from the market as a result of consumer concern.

Enzyme wash products grew into a $500 million a year business between mid-1968 and mid-1969.

Readers Grateful For Abby's Advice

DEAR READERS: May I share with you a few letters for which I am extremely thankful? — ABBY

DEAR ABBY: I don't think you realize the impact your column on V.D. had thruout the nation. Your advice to minors to telephone their public health department if they suspected they had V.D. brought in a flood of calls. So many youngsters did not realize that in some states a doctor is able to treat a minor for V.D. without informing his parents. You deserve a medal. — An M.D.

DEAR ABBY: If you never do another thing, you will have earned your place in heaven for that fine column you wrote telling youngsters what they stood to lose by trying marijuana. We had that column printed up by the thousands and distributed to all the schools in our community. — For You

DEAR ABBY: May God bless you for your column on fire prevention. You reached millions with information that will surely save many lives. — C. K. W.

DEAR ABBY: Thank you for the Confidential you had in your column saying, "Tell your parents at once. They are your best friends and no matter what they have said, I promise you they will help you."

You were right. Our daughter came home. — Grateful

DEAR ABBY: Just a line to say a heartfelt thanks for the advice you gave me. I was so upset until I read your letter telling me the harm I was doing myself because I wasn't willing to forgive my husband. You pointed out that I was really punishing myself by trying to punish him. You were so right, Abby. Thanks for making me see the light. — Pa

DEAR ABBY: I must say that in your enlightened attitude toward homosexuals, you are spiritually far ahead of all the churches in America.

Being strongly religiously trained, I should know, after three attempted suicides and four psychiatrists. For the sake of others like myself, please print this. Bless you. — Can't Sign

DEAR ABBY: This is to thank you for what you did for our family. We had been scolding our 13-year-old daughter for her bad posture for about a year with no results. Then one day you published a letter from a doctor who warned parents about spinal disorders in teen-agers. He described a simple test a mother could give her child at home. I tested my daughter, and she had all the symptoms. We took her to an orthopedic surgeon and found she had a spinal disease.

With the help of God and a back brace, it is being corrected. Surgery may be needed later, but even if it is, we thank you for printing that wonderful doctor's letter. I hope that article helped others the way it helped our daughter.—Mrs. J. W.

Status Study Due January

OTTAWA (CP) — The Liberal party's study group on the status of women plans to make its final report to the prime minister in January.

Marie Gibault of Hull, president of the Women's Liberal Federation of Canada and a member of the three-woman study group, said Wednesday the group's final policy recommendations will be based partly on a survey of party members and partly on public hearings it held across Canada.

The voluntary group was chosen in March by the Liberal party to gather opinion on the recommendations of the royal commission on the status of women and suggest priorities. Esther Greenglass of Toronto and Jan Steele of London, Ont., are its other members.

The group made a preliminary report this week to the party's consultative council outlinging priority topics, including women in the economy, day care, birth control and abortion, education and women in public life.

"There is widespread agreement that present laws need to be more specific in stating just what discrimination is against women and it is suggested that penalties be severe for those who break the law," the group said.

There was much controversy — and clearly no consensus — on the abortion issue. However, the Liberal party in its 1970 national convention came out in favor of resolutions that abortion should be a private matter between the woman and her doctor.

Most people agreed that housewives should be eligible for student loans to pursue their education and felt there are not enough women in public life.

Maternity Leave for Fathers?

WINNIPEG (CP) — Maternity leave for fathers? Why not, says a University of Manitoba economics professor. Expectant mothers are frequently unable to take care of other children in the family and leave for the father to help out would be appropriate.

Prof. Allan S. Carmel, a 32-year-old father of two, made the suggestion this week to the Manitoba legislature's industrial relations committee.

He said he was serious in his suggestion, but if the idea were incorporated into labor legislation, "I don't know whether you'd call it maternity leave."

New Democrat Cy Gonick said there was a good deal of merit in the idea.

Commented Conservative committee member James Bilton: "Oh God, forbid."

'Frightening Forecast'

OTTAWA (CP) — One birth in 10 was out of wedlock in Canada in 1969, "a frightening forecast of the future" unless government pumps more money into birth control, Grace MacInnis (NDP—Vancouver-Kingsway) said in the Commons this week.

Most of the unwed mothers were aged 15 to 24 as the trend rose steadily through the 1960s.

Mrs. MacInnis complained that the government is spending only $125,000 on family-planning education compared to $9 million on the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism.

Gerard Duquet (Quebec East), parliamentary secretary to Transport Minister Don Jamieson, said a major conference will be held in family planning in February, bringing together 150 delegates from provincial governments, welfare groups and citizen's groups.

Plan to see the beautifully animated Canadian production of Oscar Wilde's classic story for children, the Selfish Giant, on the CTV network, channel 8, Friday, November 26 at 7 p.m.

KENNEL ERUPTS AS PUP SEIZED

Two SPCA officials and two RCMP officers this morning seized a puppy at Quandalla Kennels, 21 Atkins Rd., and the operators are retaliating by saying they will take the SPCA to court.

The friction between the two animal-care organizations erupted because the puppy had broken a leg after a stump-tailed macaque (a monkey) had stuck it up on a high kennel fence.

"They (the SPCA) are a bloody, blatant, know-it-all group that thinks only they know how to take care of animals," said Wes Chowen, who helps to operate the kennel.

He charged that the SPCA seized the dog because it charges for taking in dogs while "we're doing it for nothing.

"We look after our dogs a damn sight better than they do," he added.

SPCA manager Dave Beeching refused to discuss the incident except to say that the dog was being taken to a veterinarian's for examination.

Chowen said that earlier this week he had publicized in a newspaper the kidnapping of the pup because "we were so happy to get him back."

The pup had been found on the fence after being missing for six days.

INSISTED

SPCA officials then visited the kennels on Tuesday and insisted a veterinarian treat the pup. But owner Mrs. Ellie Galisky refused because the pup's broken leg was healing on its own.

"The pup was in no pain at all and we were treating it like a baby," Chowen said.

He said the SPCA then threatened to close the kennel down, but Beeching denied this.

The kennel tries to find homes for unwanted cats and dogs, "and if we can't, we keep them," said Chowen, contrary to the SPCA which kills them.

The kennel now has about 45 dogs and 25 cats. To help support the operation Mrs. Galisky works two days a week as a waitress and a fee of $15 is charged to cover food costs when a home is found for a dog.

Chowen said they also don't spay bitches, like the SPCA does, and thus create added expenses for animal buyers.

Beeching said that it has been compulsory for the last two years that persons buying bitches from the SPCA must have them spayed and pay two-thirds of the cost, which ranges from $25 to $45.

He said this was being done to somehow cut down on the hundreds of dogs and cats the SPCA has to kill each year because homes can't be found for them. Through fund-raising from the women's auxiliary, the SPCA pays one-third of the cost of spaying.

He said the SPCA handled 3,187 dogs last year, which were either picked up as strays or brought in for adoption or for "mercy killing." Some 1,526 homes were found for them, and the rest were put away.

As for cats, 5,366 were brought in last year and only 830 homes found.

Guaranteed Space Urged

A system of partial reservations on B.C. Ferry sailings was urged today by Liberal Leader Pat McGeer.

He told a Victoria press conference that one lane of each ferry should be set aside for reservations. Persons with reservations should pay 50 cents or $1 extra for the privilege, he said.

McGeer said the success of the ferries has brought about a degree of unreliability for some travellers who know for days or weeks ahead of time that they will have to catch a particular sailing. They should be able to be certain they won't be crowded out by overflow traffic, he said.

Russians Here For Fish Talks

NANAIMO (CP) — A Russian delegation headed by V. A. Lafitsky of the ministry of fisheries in Moscow, was meeting federal fishery experts here today to exchange information on fish stocks and co-operative research.

The decision for an annual meeting between the two countries followed a series of clashes between salmon trolling vessels and Russian fishing vessels on the west coast.

Fisheries Minister Jack Davis set up a meeting in Ottawa last October when the Russians agreed to move off the big bank area of the Continental Shelf in return for port privileges and a fishing area inside the territorial boundary off the Queen Charlotte Islands on the northern B.C. coast but outside the Shelf.

The draft agreement also made provision for the regular exchange of scientific information. This is the first meeting following the signing of this agreement.

Cairo Orders Lights Dimmed

CAIRO (AP) — Cairo is dimming its lights, expanding civil defence forces and carrying out war emergency drills as its leaders speak of fighting with Israel as the only remaining solution in the Middle East.

The Egyptian capital began dimouts Wednesday night. The five tiers of spotlights on the 500-foot Cairo Tower were doused as were the neon signs along a main shopping street.

Headlights on automobiles were painted blue.

Newspapers said plans were announced for extensive blood banks and Interior Minister Namduh Salem watched fire and rescue drills in Cairo. Special instructions were given in the handling of napalm.

The semi-official Egyptian newspaper Al Ahram accused Israel of a "wicked and deceptive" campaign to win sympathy and fresh weapons from Washington.

"Israel is seeking a way out of her present isolation by picturing herself as standing alone in defence of her existence while Arab countries are closing their ranks to resume fighting her," it said.

SEEN AS TREASON

Egypt's minister of war, Gen. Mohamed Sadek, told graduating pilots Wednesday: "We shall wage the battle not because we are warmongers but due to failure of peace efforts in the fact of Israel's arrogance and America's connivance."

In another development, King Hussein of Jordan hinted in a magazine interview he would be willing to meet with top, Israeli government leaders if Israel agreed to withdraw from Arab territories, including Old Jerusalem.

No Arab leader has risked public acceptance of direct talks with Israeli leaders because this has long been portrayed to Arab masses as high treason.

Israel insists on direct negotiations as a prerequisite for a peaceful settlement of the 23-year-long Middle East conflict.

In Jerusalem, Foreign Minister Eban said a peace mission of the Organization of African Unity offered ideas aimed at resuming indirect peace talks between Israel and Egypt mediated by UN envoy Gunnar V. Jarring.

The African mission, led by President Leopold Senghor of Senegal and head of state Yokubu Gowon of Nigeria, submitted a list of questions to both the Israelis and Egyptians.

Eban said Jerusalem would submit "detailed replies" to the question within the next few days.

The Egyptian government press said Egypt reiterated its position on a peaceful settlement in a memorandum to the OAU delegation.

The points included the reopening of the Suez canal and partial withdrawal of Israeli troops from occupied Sinai as the first stage of an over-all total withdrawal.

Ontario Sets Tax Talks

TORONTO (CP)—A special pre-Christmas session of the Ontario legislature will open Monday, Dec. 13, to deal with tax legislation, Premier William Davis announced Wednesday.

Davis told a news conference he expects the session will be brief, hopefully concluding by Friday of that week.

Esquimalt Centre to Vet Future Events

Events booked into the Esquimalt Sports Centre probably will get closer scrutiny in future, Mayor Art Young said Wednesday.

Young and alderman met with the Sports Centre Commission to discuss complaints from residents in the area about problems arising from some events, particularly dog shows. Residents have complained about dogs barking and fouling up the neighborhood in nightly strolls with their owners.

The mayor noted that although the commission has ultimate responsibility in deciding which events are booked into the centre, it must get approval from municipal regulatory bodies, including health and building inspectors.

"If there is a legitimate complaint lodged after any future event, it will be the last time such a event is allowed," Young said.

Any complaints should be registered with the commission, not council, the mayor said.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A 25-year-old man who robbed a delivery man of Chinese food and money last August after driving him to Durance Lake was sentenced to four months in prison Wednesday by Judge Edmond St. Jorre.

Peter W. Shaw, 1590 Verling, pleaded guilty to robbery earlier.

Defence counsel Dermond Owen-Flood traced the life of the accused in the last few years which included two near-fatal car crashes.

Shaw had one leg amputated following the second crash about a year and a half ago.

Owen-Flood asked that Shaw be given a long suspended sentence with severe conditions including attendance at a work training program and treatment for a drinking problem.

St. Jorre said, however, he believed the accused knew what he was doing when he committed the offence following a drinking bout.

The judge said he was taking to consideration time the accused had already spent in custody. Shaw said he had been in jail about seven weeks.

Earlier testimony showed that Shaw ordered about $18 worth of Chinese food late Aug. 21, asking that it be delivered to a Gorge motel.

When the delivery man arrived, Shaw indicated he had a gun and demanded the boy get into his car.

The accused then drove the car to Durrance Lake where he detained the delivery man for awhile before taking the food and $21 cash and letting him walk two miles for help.

* * *

Gunter Horyna, 26, of 825 Roderick, was given a suspended sentence with two years' probation Wednesday for uttering forged documents.

Horyna pleaded guilty earlier to cashing two cheques totalling $339.80 at two Saanich stores Sept. 20 and 21.

Judge William Ostler noted that the accused had spent two months in custody awaiting sentence. Part of the time Horyna was receiving psychiatric treatment.

* * *

Donn George Patterson, 27, of 1670 Fort, was fined $350 by Judge E. F. N. Robinson for driving with a blood-alcohol content over .08 per cent.

He was prohibited from driving for three months.

Olympics Get Watchdogs

LAUSANNE, Switzerland (AP) — Avery Brundage, International Olympic Committee president, has announced the appointment of a special watchdog commission to enforce stringent eligibility rules.

In a letter to all 74 national Olympic committees, the 83-year-old Brundage told them it was their duty to make sure that the eligibility rules, which became effective last April 5, were observed.

But he said that "because of the alleged laxity of the NOCS in the past, the IOC has appointed a special commission headed by Hugh Weir of Australia to make certain the NOCS are fully aware of their responsibilities and that competitors who are not eligible are not entered in the games."

A key section of the new eligibility rule "bars all those whose names or photographs have been used at any time with commercial advertising," Brundage noted.

Jockey's Appeal Fails

OTTAWA (CP) — Vancouver jockey George Miller lost his bid Wednesday to get damages from the British Columbia Jockey Club for serious injuries he suffered during a 1965 race card at Vancouver Exhibition Park.

In a judgment from the bench, the Supreme Court of Canada ruled against Miller's claim that the club and Eye in the Sky, operators of the photo finish at the track, were negligent and thus caused the accident.

Miller was thrown from his horse and suffered a broken neck near the finish line during the race. Later he lost use of both his arms and legs.

He claimed the bright lights of the photo finish caused his horse to try to stop abruptly.

Exciting Time to Be Had In Flushing Fleet Ruffs

Too often during the hunting season, the ruffed grouse takes a secondary place to other Vancouver Island game birds.

Now, however, when the crisp fall nights and the blasting southeast gales have cleared the leaves from the trees, "Old Ruff," takes his rightful place and hunters begin eagerly to plan ways of outwitting this wily prize. And, he is a prize, particularly to the eastern hunter who will nostalgically recall the booming partridge flushed from abandoned farmlots, or to the mainland hunter who recalls the erratic-speedy flight of the willow as he bursts from the exposed gulley on some interior slope.

Probably no other upland game bird in North America has achieved the fame or given the frustrations as has the ruffed grouse. Scattered throughout all of the continent he is usually the first game bird that all novice hunters bag. For the novice, this first trophy was likely gained by 'Dusting" as old Ruff strutted along some nostalgic gravel road or by "plinking" as he sat rigid in some willow or alder branch.

★ ★ ★

On Vancouver Island the extremely heavy foliage of the forests in the early fall makes it impossible for the hunter to achieve any real success with ruffed grouse. Their habit of staying in the thick alder and willow bottoms along creek beds or near swamps has given them only a minor place in the upland bird hunter's sport.

During the early fall, a brace or bag of ruffed grouse is truly a bonus and usually only achieved when they are found along the edge of gravel roads. It is only in November and December when the storms have cleared the woods of their impenitrable blanket of leaves that old Ruff takes his just place.

As with all upland game birds, willows are best hunted with a trained bird dog. However, because of their short flight they can be hunted via a drive quite successfully if no dog is available. A good willow grouse dog must be one which will work close to the hunter. The sudden disappearance of leaves during November makes the grouse very jittery and he will flush at the smallest disturbance. A pointer can be very effective if the birds will hold.

In September blue grouse hunters working thickets near swamps will occasionally flush covies of willows. In November however, these covies are broken and old Ruff is usually alone or may on occasion be found with a single partner.

★ ★ ★

On Vancouver Island the ruffed grouse is usually found in the swampy alder-willow bottoms generally near a creek. His diet is varied ranging from fern leaves to berries. For this reason, no specific food item can be isolated, as it can say, for pheasants who prefer wheat, as the specific site for finding these birds.

Hunting creek bottoms cannot be over-emphasized if regular success is to be had by the hunter. These above all else should be the areas of concentration.

For the hunter, the sudden explosion in the thicket followed by a grey flash of what is certainly the speediest flight in the woods guarantees a respect few other upland game birds achieve. Not only is the sudden explosion unnerving and shattering but it is usually done with a tree or bush conveniently between the hunter and the bird. This obvious craft the bird takes with his flight is often a wonderment to the hunter particularly when equally often the bird will flush to a barren tree and perch immobile but obvious.

The hunter waiting tensely for the wing shot from this perching bird will almost invariably find the crafty bird flushing in the one direction he is unable to cover. The signal for this flush will be a sudden unfreezing of the bird usually accompanied by a slight cooing, and then — in a flash he will rocket through the thicket.

The ruffed grouse is non-migratory and usually lives its entire life within a mile of its home nest. It weighs between one and two pounds. In the early months of the year its staccatto booming heralds the first weeks of spring, although occasional drumming can be heard almost throughout the year. Two distinct colors occur, a brown and a black. However, these should not be regarded as two separate species; rather they are just a color phase.

The Lord is my shepherd: I shall not want.
He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: He leadeth me beside the still waters.
He restoreth my soul: He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake.
Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.
Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over.
Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.
PSALM 23.

9 IN MEMORIAM

GREEN — In loving memory of my darling son, Cyril (Cy), who passed away Nov. 24, 1963.
A cheery smile, a heart of gold
One of the best this world could hold,
And when old times I do recall
His gentle words and loving ways
That's when I miss him most of all.
—Sadly missed by his mother and all who knew him.

PLATTS — Leonard L., November 25, 1969.
I have lost my heart's companion,
A life linked with my own;
And day by day I miss him more
As I walk through life alone.
—Always remembered by his loving wife, Kathleen.

YATES — In loving memory of my dear mother, Bertha Yates, who passed away November 25, 1956.
Dear Mother, you are not forgotten,
Though on earth you are no more,
Still in memory you are with us
As you always were before.
—Ever remembered by her daughter Mildred and husband Alex Shields.

YOUR HEALTH: Dr. Walter Alvarez

The 'Morning After' Contraceptive

For years we doctors have wished for a birth control pill that could be taken by a woman "after the act" — especially after a rape or in the case of a young girl or a woman whose health would be endangered by a pregnancy. Now I read in the Journal of the American Medical Association that 1,000 women have taken such a pill, a synthetic estrogen (female hormone) known as diethylstilbestrol, successfully preventing pregnancy and having no serious side effects.

The women were all of child-bearing age and came to the University of Michigan Health Service within 72 hours of sexual exposure. Nearly 90 per cent had used no form of contraceptive protection. They took the drug twice daily for five days, and were asked to report to the Health Service if they did become pregnant or had any side effects. They also reported whether or not they had a normal menstrual period after having taken the pills. About half had no side reactions at all; the others suffered some intermittent nausea, and perhaps some vomiting.

None of the women became pregnant. Interestingly, the probability of becoming pregnant after a single sexual exposure without any contraceptive device having been used is between one in 50 and one in 25.

Although the Food and Drug Administration has not yet approved the drug for use as a "morning-after" pill, it has been known and widely used for 25 years in menopausal women, in women with breast cancer or an abnormal uterine, and to bring relief to women whose breasts are distressfully swollen after childbirth. The "morning after" pill is still in the experimental stage, which means that my readers must not write me and ask me to prescribe the drug for them.

I was just talking with that very able cancer researcher and Nobel Prize winner, Charles B. Huggins of the University of Chicago. He is enthusiastic about the new "morning after" pill. There is great need for it, and Dr. Huggins feels that it is safe.

Incidentally, Dr. Huggins also says that the contraceptive pill has not caused human cancer: "On the contrary, it has prevented cancer." So he says that whenever a woman took the pill to prevent pregnancy, she was also preventing a cancer of the breast. Dr. Huggins says that normally, one in every 18 women will develop breast cancer during her expected 72 years of life. And as he pointed out, estrogens such as are contained in contraceptive pills have been used in recent years by the carload, and there has been no epidemic of breast cancer in the women that have taken the drugs.

Another hopeful bit of news comes from Emory University in Atlanta, Ga., where Edwin Dale, PhD, is testing a new long-term birth control preparation, an injectable preparation of "shot" that only needs to be given four times a year. The preparation has been found to be 100 per cent effective, and in women using it for as long as two years, there have been no serious side-effects. The only problems are a tendency to irregular bleeding or an absence of menstruation.

Because of a possibility of later infertility, the new medicine is now being given mainly to women who have had all the family they want.

There recently came to my desk a splendid little paperback book, "Medical Handbook," which is filled with information for anyone who wants to have authentic advice on how to prevent pregnancy; there is a good description of the different techniques.

A copy of this booklet can be obtained from the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, 545 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10022. The cost is $2.50.

Those Plant Names Easy to Pronounce

While still in the planting season, it should help all gardeners to return to the battle of plant names.

In this column we have to be tediously exact about plant names since the aim is to be of practical use to all who love and grow plants.

If we all use the standardized names by which the various plants are known throughout the world, it simplifies tracing the country of origin and the culture required for them to be grown in this general area.

We try to pass on this love of plant names to our readers, assuring them of the ease of pronunciation of they will say the words "trippingly" as one author has written; that is, pronounce each syllable as it is written, making a harmonious whole.

In this way try Primula denticulata. Easy isn't it? And pleasant to the ear.

Just as important, both words have meanings. They are not just a jumble of letters strung together by a computer.

Primula is a word formed from the Latin "primus" meaning first; this refers to flowering first, or early in spring.

Remember the "primus stove" which burned vaporized paraffin oil and gave "early" or quick heat? and the school "primer" or first book?

Denticulata is also self-explanatory if we look at the word for a second. We see dentifrice and dentist; denture and dentition. All words we know pertaining to teeth.

The botanical "denticulata" simply means "toothed." In the case of primula denticulata — this is the species with toothed edges to the leaves.

Other species of primula are wavy edged, or are mealy, hairy or gummy, or the flowers have differences described by the specific given names.

Only one plant in the whole world is correctly identified as primula denticulata. These names are (1) generic or family name and (2) specific or given name.

Among the hundreds of species of primulas these words describe one and one only.

Rhododendron, a familiar name to local gardeners, needs no introduction, yet its meaning may be revealing. The generic name was formed from two Greek words "rodon" a rose, and "dendon" a tree, since the first true rhodo to be named was likely the "Alpine Rose," Rhododendron ferugiveum.

The next time you hear anyone complaining about "those horrible latin names" — let a good Greek-originaited one come "trippingly" from your tongue, just to show how easy they are.'

The latinized form is always used in standardizing plant names regardless of country of origin, since the latin language is not in common usage and therefore not likely to become modernized by current trends.

It may also comfort you to know that all scientific data is recorded by using standardized latin terms, so that it may be used throughout the world on an international basis.

Skipper Removed

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — The U.S. Navy says the skipper whose oil tanker spilled nearly 230,000 gallons of black fuel oil that fouled southern California beaches has been relieved of his command. A navy spokesman said Tuesday that Capt. Jack L. Snyder, 46, was replaced as skipper of the tanker Manatee and was here awaiting the results of an investigation into the spill.

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

Maxim Litvinov, Soviet foreign secretary before the Second World War, once told this story of a bridge game in Washington, where he served as ambassador.

"I had just bid a small slam," he reminisced, "and had put my hand down as the dummy when the telephone rang. The message recalled me to Moscow at once. I dashed up stairs, packed a bag . . ."

"But how did the slam come out?" he was asked. (After all, slam results are important.)

"I never stopped to find out," Litvinov replied.

"Maxim Maximovitch," said one of the listeners, "you will never make a good bridge player."

In today's deal, Litvinov, if he had time, would have derived much enjoyment watching South's play of a small slam contract.

Both sides vulnerable. South deals.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	3 ♡	Pass
4 NT	Pass	5 ◇	Pass
6 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ♣.

West's club opening was captured by East's ace, and a club was returned, South's king winning.

If one were to take a cursory look at all four hands, it would appear that the slam contract was unmakable. If South attempts to ruff out his fourth spade, East will trump the third lead of that suit. And if South picks up East's four trumps, he will eventually lose a spade trick to West. But South fulfilled his contract with no strain by employing the expert "dummy-reversal" play.

At trick three, he cashed the ace of trumps, West discarding a club. Next came the king of diamonds, after which the diamond ten was led to the board's ace. This was followed by a third diamond lead, South ruffing.

A spade was now led to dummy's king, and the board's last diamond was ruffed in the closed hand. The queen of trumps was then cashed, and the jack of trumps was led next and overtaken by dummy's king. The ten of trumps then picked up East's last trump. The last two tricks were taken by South's ace and queen of spades.

All in all, declarer made three spade tricks, two diamonds, and one club, plus six trump tricks (two trump tricks were made by ruffing diamonds, another with the ace of hearts, a fourth with the queen of hearts, and the fifth and sixth with the board's king and ten of trumps).

As Litvinoff would have agreed, it was a neat exhibition of expertise by our South declarer.

Peking Toughens Line on Indochina Struggle

By JOHN BURNS
Special to The Times

PEKING — Premier Chou En-lai told a mass rally here Tuesday that China stands ready "to take all possible measures, not flinching even from the greatest national sacrifices," in support of her allies fighting in Indochina.

In a speech that appeared to be directed as much to U.S. President Nixon as it was to North Vietnamese Premier Pham Van Dong, the guest of honor at the rally, Chou pledged that China will stand by her allies to the end, "until not a single U.S. aggressor remains."

"No matter what happens in the world this firm stand of ours is unshakeable," he declared, prompting prolonged applause from an audience of more than 10,000 in the auditorium of the Great Hall of the People.

The two-hour rally came on the fourth day of the North Vietnamese delegation's visit to the Chinese capital, highlighted Monday afternoon by a meeting with Chairman Mao Tse-tung.

Most of the members of the politburo who regularly appear in public were present at the rally, including Chiang Ching, Chairman Mao's wife, who was accorded one of the rally's longest burst of applause when her turn came to shake hands with Premier Pham.

A vivacious woman with a quick smile, she is normally listed immediately behind Premier Chou in the order of precedence. At the rally she picked up a pencil more than once to write a note to the Chinese premier, who pencilled remarks of his own on the notes and passed them back.

Mr. Chou appeared to offer in his speech an oblique answer to those who have suggested that it is inconsistent of China to invite Mr. Nixon to visit Peking at a time when U.S. troops are still fighting in Indochian. He did this by asserting that China's support of the Indochinese peoples is based on internationalism, a concept which has been invoked in recent months in support of China's new forward foreign policy, the most dramatic aspect of which has been the decision to receive Mr. Nixon.

Observers here believe that a major purpose of the North Vietnamese visit is to demonstrate to Mr. Nixon that any hopes he may entertain of persuading Peking to intervene on his behalf with Hanoi are futile. The Chinese have always said that the problems of Indochina must be settled by the Indochinese peoples themselves without foreign interference, and everything about the current visit has demonstrated that they remain wedded to that view — that they will not, in any circumstances, act as an intermediary.

Premier Chou saved some of his strongest language for Mr. Nixon's Vietnamization program, which he termed "a trick of troop withdrawal by instalments," and a "vain attempt to rely on a handful of scum of a nation to prolong" the war. He said Washington had tried a similar tactic in China before 1949, pushing "Chinesization" of Chiang Kai-shek's war against the Communists, only to end up "in notorious fiasco."

In his speech Premier Pham spoke at length of his country's admiration for China and its gratitude for the assistance Peking has given to the war effort.

In contrast to his first speech here, at a state banquet on Saturday, Premier Pham made no specific reference to the Soviet Union which has remained North Vietnam's biggest arms supplier throughout her decade-long feud with China. However, observers considered this normal, since the rally was a strictly bilateral affair in contrast with the banquet, where Soviet diplomats were prominent guests.

Home Bares Terms

LONDON (UPI) — Britain and Rhodesia today unveiled the terms of a draft peace settlement that would end the breakaway colony's six-year rebellion and perhaps hand over rule to its black African majority at some unspecified future date.

Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home, who signed the pact with Rhodesian Premier Ian Smith in Salisbury Wednesday, told parliament the terms are "fair and honorable."

Smith, in a statement to his own white-dominated parliament in Salisbury, termed it "fair and practical." He said it will meet the needs "of all fair minded people."

AT UN

Simultaneously, Britian explained the terms to a specially convened session of the United Nations Security Council in New York.

But the British opposition Labor party branded it as a "sell-out" and Britain also faced angry reactions from African members of UN.

Sir Alec, who arrived back from Salisbury early this morning, said the terms are fully within the scope of the so-called "five principles" laid down by successive British governments as a condition for recognizing Rhodesian indepenence.

These call for unimpeded progress towards ultimate rule by Rhodesia's black African majority, guarantees against restrogressive amendments of the Rhodesian constitution, immediate improvement of the political status of Rhodesia's African population, ending of racial discrimination and independence acceptable to the Rhodesian people as a whole.

MAIN CONDITIONS

At present all political power is in the hands of 250,000 white Rhodesians. The five million Africans have only token parliamentary representation.

The main conditions of the settlement were:

- Rhodesia's 1969 republican constitution will be amended and the 16 African members of parliament will be increased gradually to 50 to give them equality with the white lawmakers. In addition, there will be 10 more members elected jointly by whites and Africans.
- Rhodesia promises to make progress towards ending racial discrimination.
- The Rodesian government will release 31 of the 93 Africans now held in political detention.
- The Rhodesian government will make "significant" additional amounts of land available for African settlement. At present all land is divided 50-50 between the 250,000 whites and five million Africans.
- Britain will provide up to $12.5 million annually for 10 years in capital and technical assistance to Rhodesia's Africans.
- Britain will name a commission which will visit Rhodesia and test whether the settlement is acceptable to Rhodesians as a whole.

Troopers file into Rahway prison where warden, guards are hostages.

Prison Ransom Talks Start

RAHWAY, N.J. (AP) — Rioting prisoners held the warden and five guards hostage today at Rahway state prison and officials said negotiations were under way with prisoners who had seized control of portions of the maximum security institution.

A spokesman for the state department of institutions and agencies said talks were between prisoners and prison administrators.

"If further help should be needed from concerned citizens who might be helpful it will be requested," the spokesman said.

State troopers and corrections officers were massed outside the prison, but no plan to use them was announced.

About 50 helmeted troopers, all armed with shotguns, massed at the entrance to a tunnel-like corridor that leads through the outer wall of the prison into the yard. Reporters had been kept in a room off the corridor but were evacuated shortly before the troopers arrived this morning.

It was not known how many of the 1,142 prisoners at the maximum-security institution were involved in the riot or how much of the prison they controlled. Officials also said they did not know whether any of the prisoners were armed.

Eleven guards were reported injured, three with stab wounds, in the rioting, which began about 10 p.m. Wednesday during a movie in the auditorium.

Tom Durand, public information officer for the state department of institutions and agencies, said the trouble started when a prisoner jumped onto the stage and began a speech on "the injustice of American society."

There were about 600 prisoners in the auditorium at the time and some 150 refused to leave. Warden Samuel Vukcevich and several guards went to the auditorium, where he and six of the guards were seized by the insurrectionists.

Later, a prisoner who said his name was "Ali Ra Hassan" shouted to reporters from a window: "We asked the superintendent to send for a doctor for the warden and they wouldn't." He was asked whether the warden was injured but his reply was inaudible. Prison officials had no comment.

HANOI RECOGNIZED

OSLO (UPI) — Norway and North Vietnam have reached agreement to establish diplomatic relations at ambassadorial level, the Norwegian foreign ministry announced today.

A foreign ministry spokesman said the North Vietnamese government in a letter dated Nov. 23 and delivered through Norway's Peking ambassador accepted the Norwegian offer.

Norway becomes the first member country of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to recognize Hanoi diplomatically.

The only other western nations to recognize North Vietnam are Sweden and Switzerland.

Denmark has announced its intention to do so.

The decisions in Norway and Denmark were taken after the old centre-right coalition governments were replaced earlier this year by socialist governments.

The Norwegian foreign ministry said Norway's Peking ambassador Per Ravne will also be accredited in Hanoi.

Foreign ministry sources said it is not quite clear who the North Vietnamese ambassador in Oslo will be. But the sources said it could either be the North Vietnamese ambassador to Moscow or Hanoi's new ambassador in Stockholm.

British Troops Fire At Fleeing Gunman

BELFAST (UPI) — British troops fired at a gunman in Belfast and arrested 24 men in searches in the Northern Ireland capital and Londonderry today, the army said.

An army spokesman said soldiers were unable to say whether their bullets struck the gunman, who was seen moving through a cordoned area of Belfast.

Soldiers seized 23 men in a search through the Roman Catholic Ballymurphy district of Belfast and in smaller searches in Londonderry arrested one man, an army spokesman said.

A sniper fired at two sentries on duty at an observation post in the Roman Catholic Ardoyne district of Belfast this afternoon, an army spokesman said.

The spokesman said the shots missed the sentries, and troops afterwards raided two houses in the district, seizing explosives, ammunition and bomb cases.

Troops fired rubber bullets to break up a crowd which surrounded them hurling bottles and stones as the soldiers withdrew from the area, the spokesman said.

Earlier, British troops fired rubber bullets at youths they said tried to set fire to a customs post at the Irish Republic border town of Strabane.

Two nail bombs exploded at a Belfast police station, but caused no casualties.

British bomb disposal squads have been lucky recently. Frequently they escaped death or serious injury by minutes.

Luck ran out Wednesday night for WO C. J. Davies, a married man from Glamorgan, Wales. A bomb he was trying to dismantle in a Lurgan car showroom exploded, bringing down a wall and crushing Davies to death.

TAX REBATE FOR AGED IN TORONTO

TORONTO (CP) — City council has approved a tax rebate of up to $100 for homeowners 70 years and older for their 1972 property taxes, applied against the education part of their tax bill.

Only single persons with an annual income of less than $3,400 or married couples with incomes of less than $4,500 are eligible.

COTE WANTS TALKS ON POSTAL DISPUTE

OTTAWA (CP) — Talks are about to resume between Postmaster-General Jean-Pierre Cote and the Letter Carriers Union of Canada over the current dispute on the hiring of casual labor by the post office.

The union received a letter late Wednesday from Mr. Cote saying he is willing to meet their representatives for a frank and open discussion, a union spokesman said today.

The union replied today in a hand-delivered letter that it also is willing to have a general discussion on the issue.

The union spokesman said Mr. Cote had not "gone along completely" with the union's statement Tuesday that it would attend a meeting provided the minister would agree to a condition beforehand.

Mr. Cote said in his reply that he did not think pre-conditions should be set.

No time has yet been set for resumption of the talks but union leaders said they might learn more later today when they meet senior post office officials on another matter.

'No Return Point Near'

NEW DELHI (CP) — Pakistan charged today that Indian forces, supported by tanks and artillery, were continuing their attacks in five border areas of East Pakistan.

Radio Pakistan quoted Pakistani President Agha Mohammed Yahya Khan as saying in a speech at the dedication of a heavy machinery plant that relations with India had reached a point of no return.

Pakistan will defend "its honor and territorial integrity with all the forces at its command" in the event of an open conflict with India, the broadcast quoted him as saying.

At the ceremony Li Shi-ching, Chinese minister of heavy machinery, said that "China resolutely supports Pakistan against foreign aggression and interference."

The heavy machinery plant and a planned heavy foundry and forge on the site, both built with Chinese help, are expected to provide Pakistan with the ability to build military vehicles and tanks.

A dispatch from Dacca, East Pakistan, said officials there reported that the Indians had opened a new front Wednesday with air support in the north Bengal area and gained some ground.

But Radio Pakistan said Pakistani troops beat back two attacks, killing 480 Indian soldiers and damaging two tanks.

REPORTS DEATHS

The broadcast said seven Pakistanis were killed and 11 wounded in the fresh fighting near the Hilli and Dinajpur district of north Bengal. The area is more than 150 miles north of the Jessore district where Pakistan claimed Monday that Indian troops had launched an "all-out attack."

Indian officials here denied that any New Delhi forces were fighting across the border but admitted that the army has permission to cross into East Pakistan for self-defence.

An Indian spokesman said the attacks in East Pakistan were made by the Mukti Bahini independence fighters, trying to wrest control of the province from the military government headed by Yahya Khan.

Pakistani Foreign Secretary Sulton M. Khan said Pakistan was "actively considering" appealing to the UN Security Council to intervene in the crisis.

An Indian government spokesman denied reports the Soviet Union was planning to resolve the crisis with a conference similar to the one that led to the Tashkent agreement of 1966.

Deputy Foreign Minister Surendra Pal Singh told Parliament there was no basis for such reports.

In Washington, U.S. State Secretary William Rogers called in representatives of both nations and urged a mutual troop withdrawal from the border areas.

SUDDENLY BLIND, GIRL SEES AGAIN

HOLYROOD, Ont. (CP) — A 16-year-old girl who suddenly lost her eyesight 10 months ago, regained it just as suddenly this week.

Ann Ackert, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Ackert of this community 90 miles northwest of Toronto, was walking along a corridor at her high school Jan. 6 when she suddenly became blind.

On Monday she was walking along a corridor at her new school when her sight returned.

Ann said today she had been told by her doctors that her sight would return, "but they didn't know when or how." They "really didn't know what caused my blindness."

Ann said the return of her sight was a gradual sensation that was hard to describe. The first thing she remembers is seeing the corridor and the first thing she did was ask to see her parents.

Dollar Drops As Gold Soars

New York Times

PARIS — American dollars were unloaded in the major European centres Wednesday and the price of gold rose to its highest level in nearly four years as speculation on a dollar devaluation intensified before next week's crucial monetary meeting of 10 leading non-Communist governments in Rome.

Corporations, banks and large investors were seeking to reduce their dollar holdings to minimum quantities and were buying the robust Western European currencies such as the German mark, the British pound, the Dutch guilder, and the Swiss, Belgian and French francs as well as the Japanese yen.

The dollar moved back to Wednesday's record low in Zurich today of 3.9480 Swiss francs. It had closed slightly higher Wednesday night.

In London, the dollar dipped three cents with the pound quoted at $2.4939.

In Frankfurt, the dollar dropped to 3.3025 marks, down from Wednesday's close of 3.3080.

It declined to a record low again in Tokyo closing at 328.20 yen. The closing rate reprented an increase of 9.689 per cent in the value of the yen since it was floated Aug. 28.

School Changes Not Concessions

Education Minister Donald Brothers denied Wednesday that recently announced curriculum changes in the province's schools are a concession to dissenting principals such as Campbell River's John Young.

The changes, which will affect Grade 11 students in September, 1972, allow students a greater degree of choice in course selection. They no longer have to be "streamed" into one of his study areas.

The changes were dismissed today as "very modest indeed" by Young.

But educationists in Greater Victoria and elsewhere have welcomed the curriculum reorganization, which gives students more flexibility in choosing their course of studies.

Young said the new policy relaxing the influence of the provincial department of education in this field represents merely a "token" change.

"They are improvements, yes, but very inadequate ones to meet the real needs of students in our schools," he said.

CONFUSED

Young noted that effective last September students starting Grade 11 need 12 courses for graduation instead of the former 10 courses, and said this will only increase the present failure rate of 45 per cent by graduating students.

Young also said he thought the public might be confused on the question of terminal examinations.

"They are providing a high school graduation certificate which is going to be different from university entrance," he said, "but those students wanting to go to university are still going to have to write government examinations."

"I think it's a progressive move and I'm very much in favor of it," Greater Victoria school board chairman Allan McKinnon said today.

Many educators have been concerned for some time about the emphasis placed in the high school curriculum on university entrance, McKinnon said.

The new policy will enable young people to go to university "without being funnelled in that direction all the way through their high school career."

SAMPLE

Students would now be able to sample other disciplines in a more rounded program of educational development, he said.

McKinnon added: "We also like the idea of being able to conduct our own final exams for our own purposes, rather than preparing students for four years to write what amounts to a university entrance exam.

"The present system was really designed to meet the needs of the university rather than the needs of the high school."

Similar points were made by John Wiens, director of instruction for Greater Victoria school district, in predicting the "beneficial effects" of the curriculum changes.

If teachers do not have the departmental exams "hanging over their heads" they will be able to introduce wider scope to courses, he said.

Wiens also said the Victoria school district has advocated for some time the requirement of 12 compulsory courses for graduation, with the feeling it gave a much broader educational base.

Strangest Hijack Ever: Escape by Parachute

RENO, Nev. (UPI) — A man collected $200,000 ransom and escaped by parachute from an airliner Wednesday night in the most bizarre of all the airliner hijackings.

FBI and law enforcement agents were searching for a middle-aged, swarthy man who gave the name of D. B. Cooper, when he boarded the jetliner at Portland, Ore. He was believed to have parachuted from the rear door of a Norwest Airlines 727 jetliner somewhere between Seattle and Reno.

The ransom, turned over to the middle-aged hijacker when he released 38, passengers in Seattle, was the largest ever paid in a U.S. plane hijack. His parachute escape over the western wilderness was a nearly unbelievable feat that baffled authorities.

Officials were checking a report that Cooper was an experienced "smoke jumper" parachute fire fighter.

The hijacker flashed what appeared to be a bomb on a flight from Portland, Ore., to Seattle late Wednesday. He let the passengers off at Seattle after being handed a bag containing $200,000 and four parachutes.

"Let's get this show on the road," he told the plane's pilot, Capt. William Scott. The airliner then took off and flew low over the wilds of Oregon and Nevada. The hijacker apparently left through the back door.

As the 727 approached Reno, Scott radioed that the hijacker "took leave of us" somewhere en route. One of the parachutes and the ransom money were gone.

Officers and dogs fanned out around the Reno airport, but FBI agent Harold Campbell said there was "no way" the man could have left the plane after it landed.

Two U.S. Air Force planes shadowed the airliner as it flew south from Portland but the pilots said they did not see the man jump.

The hijacker was described by one passenger as "very relaxed."

Robert Gregory of Puyallup, Wash., sat four seats from him.

"He was dark and had dark black hair and a swarthy complexion," he said. "He had very dark, black-colored glasses on. He was kind of slumped down in the seat."

Another passenger, William Mitchell, 20, Redmond, Wash., said he sat across the aisle from the hijacker and didn't know the plane had been hijacked until it landed.

He said he saw the hijacker whispering to a stewardess sitting next to him early in the flight. "We had no idea there was a hijacker involved until we got off the plane," said Arnold Andvik of Seattle.

Passengers said they were told after the flight left Portland that there was a "slight mechanical problem" and that the plane had been asked to circle Seattle to consume excess fuel.

Irish Stew, Music Part of Scene At Manitoba's Government House

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

Pomp and circumstance take second place at Winnipeg's Government House.

It's primarily a place where informality allows working girls to feel at home and husky football players can rejuvenate themselves on Irish stew.

At 43, Lt.-Gov. William John (Jack) McKeag of Manitoba is the youngest lieutenant-governor in Canada.

McKeag is president of the real estate firm of McKeag-Harris Realty and Development Company and a director of Security Storage Co. Ltd.

His age, he feels, is one of his most important assets.

★

In Victoria, to visit Mr. and Mrs. Eric Dowell of Upper Terrace before attending the Grey Cup game in Vancouver, he and his wife, Dawn, tell why.

"We have an advantage, because of our age, in the business of bridging the generation gap. We're trying to broaden the contact of Government House because it's a place where people of different politics, religions and ethnic groups can meet at ease."

They tell some of the ways in which they do this.

Government House in Winnipeg is downtown, on the grounds of the Legislative Buildings, and surrounded by apartment houses.

It was the people in those apartments that the McKeags invited to their neighborhood party (actually two parties, each with 200 guests) four months after they moved into the vice-regal mansion.

Mrs. McKeag explains, "We've always invited the neighbors in every time we moved."

McKeag chuckles when he recalls, "One of my business friends phoned up and asked was it true that his secretary needed time off because she'd been invited to sip cocktails at Government House. I told him if she lived close by it was."

After the first party, the local television studio interviewed some of the McKeags' neighbors.

★

One young man said he'd lived opposite Government House for 15 years and often felt like going over to borrow a cup of sugar.

He added that now he thought he'd probably get that cup of sugar!

The McKeags have been ardent football fans for years and one of the parties they gave was for the Winnipeg Blue Bombers and their wives.

McKeag says, "They'd had a disastrous season and we wanted to do something to cheer them up."

The Bombers' party had an Irish theme, Irish stew, corned beef and cabbage — and Irish coffee. There was also a lively English 'pub' band that soon had the Bombers and their wives tapping their toes.

Mrs. McKeag recalls, "They wanted to dance. You should have seen those, great, big enormous guys clear away the tables in no time!"

The McKeags have four children. Like their parents, they have adapted to Government House living with ease, handling the formal moments with aplomb and adding their own touch of humanity.

During the summer months the Government House area of Winnipeg becomes a gathering spot for hippies, who also appear to feel the vice-regal residence is part of the pattern of living.

Mrs. McKeag gives an example:

"We came home from a church parade one Sunday and found a hippie sleeping on the front lawn. Our children were playing baseball. They said they didn't mind where he slept — except he was on second base!"

★

In spite of their informality, the McKeags are conscious of the fact that Government House is more than a meeting place for the people.

Mrs. McKeag is the daughter of Douglas Campbell, a former premier of the province.

"I remember my father saying, when he visited us after we moved in, that he had spent many an evening in the library talking over sticky problems."

Her husband says of his office, "It is a position of trust that is a safeguard for all people."

Isherwood Shocked By 'Secret' Club

The administration of Victoria's civic affairs by "more or less a secret or invited club" of aldermen in commitee was attacked Wednesday by one of four candidates for mayor in the December municipal elections.

Foster Isherwood, retiring Saanich alderman and Victoria mayoral hopeful, told Optimist Club members he is "shocked" by the city administration's process of making decisons in committee, totally removed from public participation, and the rubber-stamping of those committee decisions in open council sessions.

"I think that procedure should be changed."

Isherwood said if elected mayor of Victoria, he will attempt to manage the city's affairs openly, by offering "guidance" to civic administrators and council.

He said city politics in recent years has become riddled with bitterness and the administration of present mayor Courtney Haddock, seeking re-election, "has been floundering for two years."

"Those in his administration have not assisted him," Isherwood said. He suggested "there is an honest position for a new candidate (in the mayoral race) with a fresh outlook," to help circumvent the present bitterness at city hall.

Isherwood said the present mayor "had no experience (in municipal politics) . . . and that's why we're in the trouble we're in."

PRO-AMALGAMATION

The city lawyer, an Oak Bay resident who has served on Saanich council for the past four years, reiterated his pro-amalgamation stand and voiced strong opposition to the present trend toward regional government.

"I believe in amalgamation as something we should work toward."

The regional government creates "another level of government on top of all these other levels," making for unnecessary duplication of such services as planning and ultimately costing the taxpayer additional money.

Additionally, he said, regional government effectively removes the taxpayer from the decision-making process because in organized areas, representatives to the regional board are appointed from the municipal councils, not elected by the ratepayers.

Other points his platform stressed include:

● Preservation of those desirable things about Victoria which make it unique, such as historic buildings and sites.

● Establishment of a convention centre, financed and administered by the business sector rather than the city.

● Rigid control of waterfront development to exclude high-rise construction and ensure maximum benefit to the citizens from waterfront access.

Court Action Out In Hospital Case

The attorney-general's department has apparently decided to take no action in the wake of a picket line demonstration last month at Sandringham Private Hospital.

Attorney-General Leslie Peterson declined comment and his department referred questions to Sandringham's lawyer, Louis Lindholm.

Today, Lindholm said the attorney-general's department has "indicated it is unlikely" that it will institute criminal contempt of court action because the demonstration lasted only a few minutes and there were "no untoward" incidents or damage.

The private hospital, where employees have been on strike for 14 months, has asked the attorney-general's department to initiate criminal contempt of court proceedings against the B.C. Government Employees Union and the Canadian Union of Public Employees.

Just ove 150 delegates to the B.C. Government Employees Union Convention last month demonstrated their support for the strikers, members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, by joining the picket line for just over five minutes.

A court order last summer, following two mass demonstrations outside the hospital, limited the number of pickets to five.

Drug Use On Job A Problem

The Workmen's Compensation Board of B.C. is concerned about drug and alcohol abuse on the job, a seminar in the Empress Hotel was told today.

"This is far greater than any of us would normally imagine," Hector Wright, a WCB commissioner, told more than 100 labor and management delegates to the one-day seminar.

He said the problem will receive detailed attention at a conference in Vancouver Jan. 28-29, organized by the WCB in conjunction with the Alcoholism Foundation and the Narcotic Addiction Foundation.

In his speech, Wright said there is a "new look" by the WCB in terms of improved services and informing the public of what it does.

In the past, radio hotlines were full of criticism, he said. Now, he said, there is a better way of complaining — the WCB's claims advisory service.

This service will give the reasons for disputed claims, he said. Several other provincial compensation boards had copied this feature.

Lottery Proposed To Fund Health Plan

Government-operated sweepstakes to provide money for health services were proposed today by the Union of British Columbia municipalities.

In a brief presented to the provincial cabinet, the group said no new source of revenue should be overlooked" and pointed out that sweepstakes take a great amount of money out of B.C.

The money from provincial sweepstakes should be used to provide health services not now offered by the government, the brief said.

But after meeting with the cabinet, Ernie Broome, Vancouver alderman and president of UBCM, said the proposal was "quite a lightweight resolution" which was included in the brief because some of the UBCM members wanted it there.

The cabinet reaction to the idea was that "sweepstakes are not quite the right way to raise money," Broome said. The Irish Hospitals Sweepstakes don't raise much money for Irish hospitals, the UBCM delegation was told by the cabinet.

In another recommendation, the UBCM suggested the extension of $1 a day hospital insurance to private hospitals and intermediate care institutions as one of the additional services needed in the health field. The brief also noted that the province's 10,500 mobile homeowners pay annual fees for municipal services ranging from $36 to $96, while "local taxes on a typical NHA-finance single detached three-bedroom bungalow average $360 a year. . . ."

★ ★ ★

While mobile homes originally were that their name implied, houses on wheels, "almost all of them are now classified as motionless and are built without wheels and designed to be placed on a permanent foundation. . . ."

On pollution, the brief said the UBCM knew of "no way in which air pollution can be effectivley controlled other than by action on at least a regional basis."

A single authority empowered to co-ordinate land use in watersheds in the province should be established. It would also control effluent discharges into the water system, and the necessary treatment facilities.

"We believe it is essential that one agency be formed and given overall power to regulate, plan and control the attack on pollution through regional authorities."

In other recommendations, resulting from resolutions passed earlier at the UBCM convention, the government was asked to ease tax requirements for farmland.

Government sweepstakes were proposed a year ago by the Social Credit Party's annual convention and were rejected by the government shortly after.

★ ★ ★

The UBCM brief referred to sweepstakes held in Manitoba and Quebec as well as Great Britain and Ireland, all helping to take money out of B.C. which "could be better invested here."

The UBCM offered two possible solutions to "the plight of many senior citizens caught between the upward and increasing property taxes spiral of higher living costs and their own fixed and often limited means. . . ."

It said that tax relief for senior citizens "must be found" either through deferred property tax payments, though it is not generally favored, or a substantial increase in the provincial home owner's grant "on the basis of bona fide need."

Three Children in Poor Condition

Three children remained in poor condition in hospital today following a three-car accident on the Patricia Bay highway Wednesday in which a Saanich woman died.

Two other children injured in the crash were reported in fair and good condition respectively.

The accident occurred at the intersection of Sayward and the highway, and involved the chauffeur-driven car of the RCMP head in B.C., Assistant Commissioner Gordon Cunningham.

Saanich police said Mrs. Gail Wickens, 30, of 420 Brookleigh, Saanich, was killed in the crash. Two of the five children in the car she was driving were her own, and four of them were being taken to Elk Lake elementary school.

Her vehicle, eastbound on Sayward, was in collision with a car being driven south on the highway by Carl Turner, 56, of 10018 Siddall, Sidney, the lone occupant.

Police said Mrs. Wickens' car was pushed into the side of a car stopped at a red light, and carrying the RCMP head to Victoria-International Airport.

Cunningham, driven by civilian chauffeur Albert Harbottle, 2631 Cedar Hill, was on his way to pay his respects to Governor-General Roland Michener and his wife, as they left for Ottawa after a six-day visit to B.C.

Neither Cunningham nor his driver was hurt, an RCMP spokesman said. The Micheners were still at Government House at the time of the crash, and by the time they reached the scene the vehicles had been cleared away.

Reported in poor condition in St. Joseph's Hospital today were the two Wickens children, Steven, 7, and Melissa, 3; and Denise Demeule, 5, daughter of Roger Demeule, 5443 Hamsterley. They have head and other injuries.

Also at St. Joseph's is Catherine Pope, 5, daughter of G. R. Pope, 421 Brookleigh. She was reported in fair condition with a mild concussion and mutiple cuts.

Greater Victoria Coroner Edmond St. Jorre said he has ordered a post mortem today and will probably open the inquest next Monday.

Mrs. Wickens was the wife of Wayne Wickens, employed in the provincial agriculture department as B.C. superintendent of 4-H clubs.

Oak Bay Loan Approved

Oak Bay today received approval of its application for $266,090 under the federal-provincial loan program to provide winter work.

Mayor Frances Elford said the grant will allow the municipality to employ an extra 50 men, 18 at Carnarvon Park and 32 at Henderson Park.

A sum of $214,390 will be spent on improvements at Henderson Park, the major portion on a large winter activity gymnasium and the rest on construction of three tennis courts.

At Carnarvon Park, $51,700 will be used to build winter activity rooms and enlarge the lacrosse box to bring it up to regulation standards.

Architect John Di Castri is completing plans for the large Henderson Park building. The mayor hopes the work on this project will go to tender within two weeks.

Low Income Group to Back Sooke Man's Welfare Appeal

The Victoria Low Income Group said today it will back an appeal by a 25-year-old Sooke man affected this month by the provincial government's welfare-cutting program.

A spokesman said the man is Dave Morrow, who was removed from the welfare rolls allegedly because he lives too far away from the city and is not available for job opportunities.

Welfare officials confirmed Tuesday there is a recent attempt to apply stricter interpretation of the department's requirement that welfare recipients be willing and available to work.

Morrow lives on the Sooke Road near the 16 Mile House and has a telephone in service.

An appeal will take place Monday, the Low Income Group spokesman said.

The reason given by the welfare department was that the $90 rent paid by Morrow for his house is too high.

Overdue Letter to an American Friend

ONE OF THESE YEARS, I may get around to returning the filleting knife you loaned me. You caught two salmon that trip on coho bucktails I tied for you. The boat was yours, trailered north from California. But your outboard was running rough, so we used mine.

As men who have known each other for a long time, we take these casual exchanges no less for granted than the fact of friendship.

You are stubbornly American. I am no less determinedly Canadian. Even if the faded One-World dream of Adlai Stevenson's should by some miracle achieve reality in our lifetimes, we would remain what we are — men of two nations, with ingrained loyalties, and differences that go more than skin-deep.

I do not approve all that your country does and has done. When we next meet, I expect you will ask me what the hell Canada thinks she's up to, and that we will argue as we have done numerous times before.

With vigor, as one of your presidents whose death I mourned used to say. Even fiercely.

Yet while we do so, it is probable that you will be accepting another Canadian rye in my house, or pouring bourbon-on-the-rocks in yours.

I find it unthinkable that we should ever be less than friends. For if we have our differences and our areas of disagreement, we also have more in common than bullheadedness and a tendency to form hasty opinions.

There is the bond that exists between men who would sooner fish than eat.

There is the fact of long acquaintance. Because of it, we can trace back.

When you and your wife were newly married, my wife and I were your first guests. You two were domiciled for that week in a tent in an American campground. We sat in a row on an air mattress, and your bride, assuming that we as Canadians must be avid tea-drinkers, worried, because she had only coffee to serve.

Your Western-American accents amused us. Until you convinced us of the fact, we were unaware that such a thing as a Canadian accent existed.

That was a long time ago — long enough for your son, who learned the way of a trout with a fly from me, to have grown into a useful man. And although you and I have never agreed about the Vietnam war, I shared your relief when he came safe home from that encounter.

Neither of us is given to apologizing for the decisions and actions of his country. By the same token, neither of us knows as much as he should about the other's country. But we have learned a good deal from each other, and we can lay claim to a limited understanding.

Even though you taxed me with exhibiting a split personality when we talked about American investment in Canada, I think you understand that very many Canadians who accept the need for outside investment also realize the dangers of economic domination.

On my part, I'm unlikely to make the mistake of casting wholesale blame on the United States for Canada's economic troubles. It would be foolish of me to do so, knowing that massive layoff and cutback have been a threat to your personal economy for the last two years.

Not that we spend overmuch time in discussions of that sort. When we next meet, as I trust we will late next summer when the coho are putting on weight, we will have other matters in mind.

What I have to say before winding up this letter isn't really necessary. But because of the temper of our times, I feel it should be said.

Knowing you, I cannot be anything but cold toward anti-Americanism and those who profess it. To be otherwise would be a betrayal of friendship.

CHUM Offers $19 Million

MONTREAL (CP) — Canadian Marconi Co. of Montreal will receive about $19,325,000 for the transfer of its broadcasting division to a new company — CFCF Ltd., 80 per cent owned by CHUM Ltd. of Toronto, L. M. Daley, president of the company said Tuesday.

Canadian Marconi will retain a 20-per-cent interest in the new company, Mr. Daley said in a statement.

The transaction is subject to the approval of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission which is holding hearings on the transfer of the broadcasting licences involved.

Canadian Marconi's broadcasting division owns Montreal television station CFCF-TV and Montreal radio stations CFCF, CFQR-FM and CFCX, a shortwave station.

Daley said the exact profit Canadian Marconi will make on the transaction cannot be computed until the transaction is finished.

An earlier agreement to sell its broadcasting division to Bushnell could not arange the Ottawa fell through when Bushnell could arrange the necessary financing.

Marconi is selling its broadcasting division to comply with a federal regulation that all radio and television stations in Canada must be 80 per cent Canadian-owned. General Electric Co. of Great Britain owns approximately 51 per cent of Canadian Marconi.

Canadian Marconi reported loss of $349,000 for the six-month period ended last Sept. 30 compared with profits of $353,000 for the same period the previous year.

Peking Toughens Line on Indochina Struggle

By JOHN BURNS
Special to

PEKING — Premier Chou En-lai told a mass rally here Tuesday that China stands ready "to take all possible measures, not flinching even from the greatest national sacrifices," in support of her allies fighting in Indochina.

In a speech that appeared to be directed as much to U.S. President Nixon as it was to North Vietnamese Premier Pham Van Dong, the guest of honor at the rally, Chou pledged that China will stand by her allies to the end, "until not a single U.S. aggressor remains."

"No matter what happens in the world this firm stand of ours is unshakeable," he declared, prompting prolonged applause from an audience of more than 10,000 in the auditorium of the Great Hall of the People.

The two-hour rally came on the fourth day of the North Vietnamese delegation's visit to the Chinese capital, highlighted Monday afternoon by a meeting with Chairman Mao Tse-tung.

Most of the members of the politburo who regularly appear in public were present at the rally, including Chiang Ching, Chairman Mao's wife, who was accorded one of the rally's longest burst of applause when her turn came to shake hands with Premier Pham.

A vivacious woman with a quick smile, she is normally listed immediately behind Premier Chou in the order of precedence. At the rally she picked up a pencil more than once to write a note to the Chinese premier, who pencilled remarks of his own on the notes and passed them back.

Mr. Chou appeared to offer in his speech an oblique answer to those who have suggested that it is inconsistent of China to invite Mr. Nixon to visit Peking at a time when U.S. troops are still fighting in Indochian. He did this by asserting that China's support of the Indochinese peoples is based on internationalism, a concept which has been invoked in recent months in support of China's new forward foreign policy, the most dramatic aspect of which has been the decision to receive Mr. Nixon.

Observers here believe that a major purpose of the North Vietnamese visit is to demonstrate to Mr. Nixon that any hopes he may entertain of persuading Peking to intervene on his behalf with Hanoi are futile. The Chinese have always said that the problems of Indochina must be settled by the Indochinese peoples themselves without foreign interference, and everything about the current visit has demonstrated that they remain wedded to that view — that they will not, in any circumstances, act as an intermediary.

Premier Chou saved some of his strongest language for Mr. Nixon's Vietnamization programe which he termed "a trick of troop withdrawal by instalments," and a "vain attempt to rely on a handful of scum of a nation to prolong" the war. He said Washington had tried a similar tactic in China before 1949, pushing "Chinesization" of Chiang Kai-shek's war against the Communists, only to end up "in notorious fiasco."

In his speech Premier Pham spoke at length of his country's admiration for China and its gratitude for the assistance Peking has given to the war effort.

In contrast to his first speech here, at a state banquet on Saturday, Premier Pham made no specific reference to the Soviet Union which has remained North Vietnam's biggest arms supplier throughout her decade-long feud with China. However, observers considered this normal, since the rally was a strictly bilateral affair in contrast with the banquet, where Soviet diplomats were prominent guests.

Force Denied By Chretien

OTTAWA (CP) — Alberta Indians kept their children away from school earlier this month not because of federal government policies but because their children are not welcome in the provincial schools, Indian Affairs Minister Jean Chretien said Wednesday.

In a vigorous Commons defence of his department's policies, Mr. Chretien also said it made him angry when Alberta Conservative MPs accused him of forcing the Indians to attend provincial schools.

That policy was adopted in 1961 under the Conservative government, Mr. Chretien said.

He was taking part in an unscheduled debate started by Frank Howard (NDP—Skeena) calling for Commons approval of a report by a Commons committee on Indian education.

The debate which adjourned without a decision, pushed aside the regular Commons question period and scheduled debate on the government's tax change bill.

CENTRES ON CHARGES

Wednesday's debate centred on charges by Harold Cardinal, leader of the Indian Association of Alberta, that Mr. Chretien was withholding funds for a proposed Indian cultural and educational centre for the province in retaliation for the Indians keeping their children away from classes.

Mr. Cardinal made his charges on a CBC-TV program Sunday night. The matter subsequently cropped up several times in Parliament this week because the Alberta leader supported his charges by quoting from what he said was a confidential cabinet document.

Mr. Chretien made several unflattering references to Mr. Cardinal and his association. At one point he said Mr. Cardinal had told a pure lie and at another point said he was trying to build a red bureaucracy.

The minister also denied he was withholding money from Alberta. He was interested in providing money for Indian cultural centres.

One of the difficulties, Mr. Chretien said, was that some Indian associations wanted money without being held accountable for it.

NEED RULES

But the government couldn't spend millions of dollars without some rules being developed.

He praised most of the Indian associations for doing a responsible job. Some preferred to state their case over television and that wasn't the way things are done.

The minister also made a plea to MPs and Indian leaders to avoid petty politics when discussing what he called Canada's most pressing social and economic problem.

Both Mr. Chretien and Mr. Cardinal were scheduled to appear before the Commons Indian affairs committee today to give their sides of the Alberta dispute.

Mr. Howard accused the minister of failing to carry out his responsibility towards the Alberta Indians. All of their requests were in line with treaties signed with the federal government calling for schools and decent living conditions, he said.

He said the minister was holding back money for the cultural centre until election year, an insult to the Indians.

Robert Simpson (PC—Churchill) said the minister was wrong in saying MPs shouldn't make a political issue of Indian problems.

Without politics, nothing would have been done on Indian policy for the last 10 years.

Bud Orange (L—Northwest Territories) said Mr. Chretien had made tremendous improvement for Indians since he became minister. He expressed his respect and support for government policies.

Tom Barnett (NDP—Comox-Alberni) said some provinces were abusing federal funds given to them for Indian education.

Ottawa should build model schools on reserves and shame the provinces into reaching higher standards for Indian schools.

WANT OWN SYSTEM

Mr. Chretien said Indians were not asking for schools on reserves. They just wanted a better school system.

Paul Yewchuk (PC—Athabasca) said attempts to integrate the Indian school system with Alberta's produced a dropout rate of 94 per cent.

Now the Indians wanted to run their own school system. They were forced to pull their children out of school to draw attention to their demands. The school strike was no more wrong than any other strike.

Social Credit Leader Real Caouette traced the school troubles to the time when missionary schools were removed from the reserves.

The Conservatives say they have the answers to the problems of the Indian, said Mr. Caouette. Then why hadn't they solved them when they were in power?

While the Commons debate was raging, George Manuel, president of the National Indian Brotherhood, told a news conference that Indians are rapidly losing confidence in Mr. Chretien.

ROOM FOR CHANGES IN ACT

MONTREAL (CP) — The federal government's proposed Competition Act is designed to support efficiency and productivity through competition, but there is still room for changes in the bill, Ron Basford, consumer affairs minister said here Wednesday.

Mr. Basford told the annual convention of the Federation of Automobile Dealers Associations of Canada the proposed bill is "a set of laws to assure as much as possible efficiency and productivity through competition."

"It is legislation that says if we can get rid of some of the practices that stop businessmen from competing freely and effectively, then we can continue to assure that the Canadian economy moves in a way that will help everyone, businessmen and consumers."

Mr. Basford said the government did not intend to take the bill any farther in its present form.

CALLS FOR VIEWS

Calling on businessmen to present their views in a constructive manner, he said:

"We have asked business to study the draft bill, to measure its provisions against their own operations and to tell us if it creates any difficulties or if it could be improved."

He said the mechanisms contained in the proposed Competition Act are ways of governing and economy preferable to complete government control or regulation.

He said the government could have put wage and price controls on the economy but added "I don't see too much support for that unless an overwhelming need arise in the public interests."

The bill would allow the forces of free competition, free enterprise and free market system to "work as effectively as possible."

Reviewing the act, Mr. Basford said he could see no objection to the consumer protection sections of the bill since all businessmen suffer in the loss of public confidence created by unethical dealers.

The act would ban such practices as misleading advertising and pyramid referral selling.

He said the act placed things like export agreements, merger and monopoly practices and other trade practices under civil law and within the jurisdiction of a tribunal because such activities were generally beneficial or did not harm competition.

"The tribunal's task is to sort out these situations from those which may be harmful to the working of the competitive market and therefore to growth and dynamic efficiency," Mr. Basford said.

He said the tribunal permitted examination of certain trade practices and mergers without having to deal with them in criminal courts as now is required.

Home Bares Terms

LONDON (UPI) — Britain and Rhodesia today unveiled the terms of a draft peace settlement that would end the breakaway colony's six-year rebellion and perhaps hand over rule to its black African majority at some unspecified future date.

Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home, who signed the pact with Rhodesian Premier Ian Smith in Salisbury Wednesday, told parliament the terms are "fair and honorable."

Smith, in a statement to his own white-dominated parliament in Salisbury, termed it "fair and practical." He said it will meet the needs "of all fair minded people."

AT UN

Simultaneously, Britian explained the terms to a specially convened session of the United Nations Security Council in New York.

But the British opposition Labor party branded it as a "sell-out" and Britain also faced angry reactions from African members of UN.

Sir Alec, who arrived back from Salisbury early this morning, said the terms are fully within the scope of the so-called "five principles" laid down by successive British governments as a condition for recognizing Rhodesian indepenence.

These call for unimpeded progress towards ultimate rule by Rhodesia's black African majority, guarantees against restrogressive amendments of the Rhodesian constitution, immediate improvement of the political status of Rhodesia's African population, ending of racial discrimination and independence acceptable to the Rhodesian people as a whole.

MAIN CONDITIONS

At present all political power is in the hands of 250,000 white Rhodesians. The five million Africans have only token parliamentary representation.

The main conditions of the settlement were:

- Rhodesia's 1969 republican constitution will be amended and the 16 African members of parliament will be increased gradually to 50 to give them equality with the white lawmakers. In addition, there will be 10 more members elected jointly by whites and Africans.
- Rhodesia promises to make progress towards ending racial discrimination.
- The Rhodesian government will release 31 of the 93 Africans now held in political detention.
- The Rhodesian government will make "significant" additional amounts of land available for African settlement. At present all land is divided 50-50 between the 250,000 whites and five million Africans.
- Britain will provide up to $12.5 million annually for 10 years in capital and technical assistance to Rhodesia's Africans.
- Britain will name a commission which will visit Rhodesia and test whether the settlement is acceptable to Rhodesians as a whole.

Troopers file into Rahway prison where warden, guards are hostages.

Prison Ransom Talks Start

RAHWAY, N.J. (AP) — Rioting prisoners held the warden and five guards hostage today at Rahway state prison and officials said negotiations were under way with prisoners who had seized control of portions of the maximum security institution.

A spokesman for the state department of institutions and agencies said talks were between prisoners and prison administrators.

"If further help should be needed from concerned citizens who might be helpful it will be requested," the spokesman said.

State troopers and corrections officers were massed outside the prison, but no plan to use them was announced.

About 50 helmeted troopers, all armed with shotguns, massed at the entrance to a tunnel-like corridor that leads through the outer wall of the prison into the yard. Reporters had been kept in a room off the corridor but were evacuated shortly before the troopers arrived this morning.

It was not known how many of the 1,142 prisoners at the maximum-security institution were involved in the riot or how much of the prison they controlled. Officials also said they did not know whether any of the prisoners were armed.

Eleven guards were reported injured, three with stab wounds, in the rioting, which began about 10 p.m. Wednesday during a movie in the auditorium.

Tom Durand, public information officer for the state department of institutions and agencies, said the trouble started when a prisoner jumped onto the stage and began a speech on "the injustice of American society."

There were about 600 prisoners in the auditorium at the time and some 150 refused to leave. Warden Samuel Vukcevich and several guards went to the auditorium, where he and six of the guards were seized by the insurrectionists.

Later, a prisoner who said his name was "Ali Ra Hassan" shouted to reporters from a window: "We asked the superintendent to send for a doctor for the warden and they wouldn't." He was asked whether the warden was injured but his reply was inaudible. Prison officials had no comment.

HANOI RECOGNIZED

OSLO (UPI) — Norway and North Vietnam have reached agreement to establish diplomatic relations at ambassadorial level, the Norwegian foreign ministry announced today.

A foreign ministry spokesman said the North Vietnamese government in a letter dated Nov. 23 and delivered through Norway's Peking ambassador accepted the Norwegian offer.

Norway becomes the first member country of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to recognize Hanoi diplomatically.

The only other western nations to recognize North Vietnam are Sweden and Switzerland.

Denmark has announced its intention to do so.

The decisions in Norway and Denmark were taken after the old centre-right coalition governments were replaced earlier this year by socialist governments.

The Norwegian foreign ministry said Norway's Peking ambassador Per Ravne will also be accredited in Hanoi.

Foreign ministry sources said it is not quite clear who the North Vietnamese ambassador in Oslo will be. But the sources said it could either be the North Vietnamese ambassador to Moscow or Hanoi's new ambassador in Stockholm.

British Troops Fire At Fleeing Gunman

BELFAST (UPI) — British troops fired at a gunman in Belfast and arrested 24 men in searches in the Northern Ireland capital and Londonderry today, the army said.

An army spokesman said soldiers were unable to say whether their bullets struck the gunman, who was seen moving through a cordoned area of Belfast.

Soldiers seized 23 men in a search through the Roman Catholic Ballymurphy district of Belfast and in smaller searches in Londonderry arrested one man, an army spokesman said.

A sniper fired at two sentries on duty at an observation post in the Roman Catholic Ardoyne district of Belfast this afternoon, an army spokesman said.

The spokesman said the shots missed the sentries, and troops afterwards raided two houses in the district, seizing explosives, ammunition and bomb cases.

Troops fired rubber bullets to break up a crowd which surrounded them hurling bottles and stones as the soldiers withdrew from the area, the spokesman said.

Earlier, British troops fired rubber bullets at youths they said tried to set fire to a customs post at the Irish Republic border town of Strabane.

Two nail bombs exploded at a Belfast police station, but caused no casualties.

British bomb disposal squads have been lucky recently. Frequently they escaped death or serious injury by minutes.

Luck ran out Wednesday night for WO C. J. Davies, a married man from Glamorgan, Wales. A bomb he was trying to dismantle in a Lurgan car showroom exploded, bringing down a wall and crushing Davies to death.

TAX REBATE FOR AGED IN TORONTO

TORONTO (CP) — City council has approved a tax rebate of up to $100 for homeowners 70 years and older for their 1972 property taxes, applied against the education part of their tax bill.

Only single persons with an annual income of less than $3,400 or married couples with incomes of less than $4,500 are eligible.

COTE WANTS TALKS ON POSTAL DISPUTE

OTTAWA (CP) — Talks are about to resume between Postmaster-General Jean-Pierre Cote and the Letter Carriers Union of Canada over the current dispute on the hiring of casual labor by the post office.

The union received a letter late Wednesday from Mr. Cote saying he is willing to meet their representatives for a frank and open discussion, a union spokesman said today.

The union replied today in a hand-delivered letter that it also is willing to have a general discussion on the issue.

The union spokesman said Mr. Cote had not "gone along completely" with the union's statement Tuesday that it would attend a meeting provided the minister would agree to a condition beforehand.

Mr. Cote said in his reply that he did not think pre-conditions should be set.

TAY NINH, Vietnam (AP) — U.S. B-52 bombers spearheaded the fourth day of a big South Vietnamese drive against North Vietnamese supply lines in eastern Cambodia today. The Stratofortresses struck while South Vietnamese rangers and armored columns manoeuvred five miles to the south, still with no significant contact reported.

'No Return Point Near'

NEW DELHI (CP) — Pakistan charged today that Indian forces, supported by tanks and artillery, were continuing their attacks in five border areas of East Pakistan.

Radio Pakistan quoted Pakistani President Agha Mohammed Yahya Khan as saying in a speech at the dedication of a heavy machinery plant that relations with India had reached a point of no return.

Pakistan will defend "its honor and territorial integrity with all the forces at its command" in the event of an open conflict with India, the broadcast quoted him as saying.

At the ceremony Li Shiching, Chinese minister of heavy machinery, said that "China resolutely supports Pakistan against foreign aggression and interference."

The heavy machinery plant and a planned heavy foundry and forge on the site, both built with Chinese help, are expected to provide Pakistan with the ability to build military vehicles and tanks.

A dispatch from Dacca, East Pakistan, said officials there reported that the Indians had opened a new front Wednesday with air support in the north Bengal area and gained some ground.

But Radio Pakistan said Pakistani troops beat back two attacks, killing 480 Indian soldiers and damaging two tanks.

REPORTS DEATHS

The broadcast said seven Pakistanis were killed and 11 wounded in the fresh fighting near the Hilli and Dinajpur district of north Bengal. The area is more than 150 miles north of the Jessore district where Pakistan claimed Monday that Indian troops had launched an "all-out attack."

Indian officials here denied that any New Delhi forces were fighting across the border but admitted that the army has permission to cross into East Pakistan for self-defence.

An Indian government spokesman denied reports the Soviet Union was planning to resolve the crisis with a conference similar to the one that led to the Tashkent agreement of 1966.

Deputy Foreign Minister Surendra Pal Singh told Parliament there was no basis for such reports.

In Washington, U.S. State Secretary William Rogers called in representatives of both nations and urged a mutual troop withdrawal from the border areas.

SUDDENLY BLIND, GIRL SEES AGAIN

HOLYROOD, Ont. (CP) — A 16-year-old girl who suddenly lost her eyesight 10 months ago, regained it just as suddenly this week.

Ann Ackert, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Ackert of this community 90 miles northwest of Toronto, was walking along a corridor at her high school Jan. 6 when she suddenly became blind.

On Monday she was walking along a corridor at her new school when her sight returned.

Ann said today she had been told by her doctors that her sight would return, "but they didn't know when or how." They "really didn't know what caused my blindness."

Ann said the return of her sight was a gradual sensation that was hard to describe. The first thing she remembers is seeing the corridor and the first thing she did was ask to see her parents.

Dollar Drops As Gold Soars

New York Times

PARIS — American dollars were unloaded in the major European centres Wednesday and the price of gold rose to its highest level in nearly four years as speculation on a dollar devaluation intensified before next week's crucial monetary meeting of 10 leading non-Communist governments in Rome.

Corporations, banks and large investors were seeking to reduce their dollar holdings to minimum quantities and were buying the robust Western European currencies such as the German mark, the British pound, the Dutch guilder, and the Swiss, Belgian and French francs as well as the Japanese yen.

The dollar moved back to Wednesday's record low in Zurich today of 3.9480 Swiss francs. It had closed slightly higher Wednesday night.

In London, the dollar dipped three cents with the pound quoted at $2.4939.

In Frankfurt, the dollar dropped to 3.3025 marks, down from Wednesday's close of 3.3080.

It declined to a record low again in Tokyo closing at 328.20 yen. The closing rate represented an increase of 9.689 per cent in the value of the yen since it was floated Aug. 28.

School Changes Not Concessions

Education Minister Donald Brothers denied Wednesday that recently announced curriculum changes in the province's schools are a concession to dissenting principals such as Campbell River's John Young.

The changes, which will affect Grade 11 students in September, 1972, allow students a greater degree of choice in course selection. They no longer have to be "streamed" into one of his study areas.

The changes were dismissed today as "very modest indeed" by Young.

But educationists in Greater Victoria and elsewhere have welcomed the curriculum reorganization, which gives students more flexibility in choosing their course of studies.

Young said the new policy relaxing the influence of the provincial department of education in this field represents merely a "token" change.

"They are improvements, yes, but very inadequate ones to meet the real needs of students in our schools," he said.

CONFUSED

Young noted that effective last September, students starting Grade 11 need 12 courses for graduation instead of the former 10 courses, and said this will only increase the present failure rate of 45 per cent by graduating students.

Young also said he thought the public might be confused on the question of terminal examinations.

"They are providing a high school graduation certificate which is going to be different from university entrance," he said, "but those students wanting to go to university are still going to have to write government examinations."

"I think it's a progressive move and I'm very much in favor of it," Greater Victoria school board chairman Allan McKinnon said today.

Many educators have been concerned for some time about the emphasis placed in the high school curriculum on university entrance, McKinnon said.

The new policy will enable young people to go to university "without being funnelled in that direction all the way through their high school career."

SAMPLE

Students would now be able to sample other disciplines in a more rounded program of educational development, he said.

McKinnon added: "We also like the idea of being able to conduct our own final exams for our own purposes, rather than preparing students for four years to write what amounts to a university entrance exam.

"The present system was really designed to meet the needs of the university rather than the needs of the high school"

Similar points were made by John Wiens, director of instruction for Greater Victoria school district, in predicting the "beneficial effects" of the curriculum changes.

If teachers do not have the departmental exams "hanging over their heads" they will be able to introduce wider scope to courses, he said.

Wiens also said the Victoria school district has advocated for some time the requirement of 12 compulsory courses for graduation, with the feeling it gave a much broader educational base.

Strangest Hijack Ever: Escape by Parachute

RENO, Nev. (UPI) — A man collected $200,000 ransom and escaped by parachute from an airliner Wednesday night in the most bizarre of all the airliner hijackings.

FBI and law enforcement agents were searching for a middle-aged, swarthy man who gave the name of D. B. Cooper, when he boarded the jetliner at Portland, Ore. He was believed to have parachuted from the rear door of a Norwest Airlines 727 jetliner somewhere between Seattle and Reno.

The ransom, turned over to the middle-aged hijacker when he released 38 passengers in Seattle, was the largest ever paid in a U.S. plane hijack. His parachute escape over the western wilderness was a nearly unbelievable feat that baffled authorities.

Officials were checking a report that Cooper was an experienced "smoke jumper" (parachute fire fighter).

The hijacker flashed what appeared to be a bomb on a flight from Portland, Ore., to Seattle late Wednesday. He let the passengers off at Seattle after being handed a bag containing $200,000 and four parachutes.

"Let's get this show on the road," he told the plane's pilot, Capt. William Scott. The airliner then took off and flew low over the wilds of Oregon and Nevada. The hijacker apparently left through the back door.

As the 727 approached Reno, Scott radioed that the hijacker "took leave of us" somewhere en route. One of the parachutes and the ransom money were gone.

Officers and dogs fanned out around the Reno airport, but FBI agent Harold Campbell said there was "no way" the man could have left the plane after it landed.

Two U.S. Air Force planes shadowed the airliner as it flew south from Portland but the pilots said they did not see the man jump.

The hijacker was described by one passenger as "very relaxed."

Robert Gregory of Puyallup, Wash., sat four seats from him.

"He was dark and had dark black hair and a swarthy complexion," he said. "He had very dark, black-colored glasses on. He was kind of slumped down in the seat."

Another passenger, William Mitchell, 20, Redmond, Wash., said he sat across the aisle from the hijacker and didn't know the plane had been hijacked until it landed.

He said he saw the hijacker whispering to a stewardess sitting next to him early in the flight. "We had no idea there was a hijacker involved until we got off the plane," said Arnold Andvik of Seattle.

Passengers said they were told after the flight left Portland that there was a "slight mechanical problem" and that the plane had been asked to circle Seattle to consume excess fuel.
